Dr. Talmage Shows the Inspiration of Example.

CAN THESE DRY BONES LIVE?"

Glowing Tribute to Those Who Fell on the Battlefield-Christians Should Labor to So Disseminate the Teachings of Jesus that War in the Future shall Become an Impossibility.

Entered According to Act of Parliament of Can-ada, in the year 1992 by William Baily, of To-ronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture. Ottawa.

Chicago, June 1 .- In this sermo the Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage shows how the dead heroes whose graves are garlanded on Memorial day live again in the spirit which their self sacrifice inspires; text, Ezekiel xxxvii, 3, "Can these bones live?" A dark, gruesome vallery, peopled with the strangest of all strange hosts, a great army of bleached skeletons, is the scene of the pro-phet's vision. Amid the millions and billions of dry bones there is not the gleam of one eye, the beating of one neart, the welcome of one handclasp. All are motionless. All are dead. Then, in the silence, there comes a voice asking the momentous ques-tion, "Can these bones live?" And, strange to say, as if in answer, the dry bones begin to move, the joints, li e rusty hinges, creaking from long The different skeletons lift themselves and stand up. Then, stranger still, these skeleton forms stoop down, as we would bend to gather the fresh, clean linen after a norning bath, and they clothe themselves in garments of flesh and blood. God first asked Ezekiel whether the dry bones could live. Then God showed the prophet by visual maniestation that they could.

The same question which was asked the ancient prophet I ask you this national Memorial day in reference to the bones, the dry bones, of the soldiers who died in the civil war. I ask the question because I intend to answer it myself. I want to prove this morning that the men who met a soldier's death fighting bravely are They are more alive to. day than when their deeds testified to the world that the heroes and heroines-for I shall speak in reference to both-should be classed among the moral and intellectual forces of their day and generation.

The dead of the battlefields are whelming power of a personal example. It is the ability which a brave leader, by a deed of heroism, has to instill the courage of his own life into other lives. There comes a will be officers and protect the country assaulting brigade commander do? seition in the rear of his troops, where he has a right to stay 2 Does he send one of his staff officers to lead in the charge? Does he look after his own safety? He draws his sword and on, no. He front of his brigade. He hurriedly utters a few inspiring words. He says: "Boys, the safety of the whole army depends upon this move. Either we must capture yonder hill and break that opposing line, or else the whole force must retreat or surrender. Some of us may lay down our lives there. Will you follow me, men? I ask no man to go where I am not ready to lead. I ask no man to charge where it may not be possible for him to step over my dead body. Men, will you go? Will you go?' And all down the of throats there comes the hoarse answer; "Aye, general, we will go! We will go!" This was the way General George Edward Pickett This was the way Marshal Ney did when he led the Old Guard down into the ravine of Ohain, where the Waterloo tragedy was practically ended. This was the way Richard Neville, Earl of Warwick, did upon the battlefield of Barnet. When the great kingmaker saw that his troops were being routed, he rode to the top of a hill and dismounted. There, within sight of his men, he drove his sword into the heart of his noble war charger. Then, having cut off all possibility of personal escape, he called his troops, saying: "The com-mander of the English forces is here to conquer or die! Will his men be willing to die with him?" The retreating soldiers gathered around their noble leader and died by thou-sands as the Earl of Warwick him-self died. War may be hell, as an American general once bluntly de-clared, but by the gleam of the hot, ful inferno are seen the heroic deeds of many whose noble lives have been tried and purified by the fires of an earthly martyrdom. Sometimes we are apt to errone busly believe that the only sufferings of war were to be found in the gun-shot wounds and the swamp fevers, in the heartrending cries of "Water! Water!" heard at night from the wounded lying between the contend-ing lines, in the colds, the heats, the unger, the weariness and the homeickness suffered by the men at the But I have always believed that the wives and mothers and the sisters and sweethearts who stayed at home to weep suffered far more than the husbands and sons and brothers who donned their uniforms and went forth to die. Think of their sad, weary nights! Think of their startled ears when the rumors were heard that a great battle was about to be fought! Think of their wet eyes, scanning the long newspawet eyes, scanning the long newspaper columns of the dead and missing! That awful word "missing!" Think of the poverty which the young widow had to face, with four or five children at her back! To-day we honor the dead soldiers who wore the blue and the gray. We ought also honor the wives and mothers, the sweethearts and the sisters, who were willing to give those soldiers as a sacrifice, as well as the heroes a sacrifice, as well as the heroes who were willing to die.

But, though the noble women of hissing, demoniac flames of that aw-the north and south may nave fered greatly, yet by their very ferings God was able to heal wounds, the bleeding wounds, of the nation. The breaking hearts of the north reached out toward the break-ing hearts of the south, and they found that in their troubles they were sisters. Some of the bereft mothers had sons fighting in both armies. As such a mother sat in her family plot between the two graves—between the grave of her boy in blue and that of her boy in gray she prayed that the past civil strife night be forever buried. She pleaded with earnest prayer because her boys who died had come from the same cradle and looked up into the eyes of the same mother.

The dead of battlefields are intensely alive to-day because they have proved that the strength of their ountry is to be found in the multiudes of its consecrated homes and not in the size of its standing armies. When the civil war broke out, there were not enrolled upon the muster of the war department more than 25,000 men. The traveler could go up and down the length and breadth of the land without seeing an American soldier in uniform except in a few forts built for protection against the Indians and in places like Gov-ernors Island and Fort Sumter. All Europe was shaking under the tramp of the martial hosts which were narshaled upon every frontier; yet n America there were not enough soldiers to make a respectable lookng national awkward squad. But no sooner did the bugle blast of war sound than the volunteers came from They came from the verywhere. ine woods of Maine and the Louisiana plantations, from among the California flowers and the Alabama cottonuelds, from the Dakota prairies and the Mississippi flat-boats, rom the Pennsylvania mines and the South Carolina tobacco factories. They came by the tens of thousands. They came by the hundreds of thou-They came by the million They came to prove for all time that for this country, at least, there is no need of a great standing army. When war breaks out, a nation has o use the ships which it, has constructed in times of peace. It takes, years to build a ficating fighting machine. But what I have said is true in reference to a standing army. A country, which in a few months could produce well disciplined armies, the army of the south and the army of the north, does not need, save in times of war, to call the keenest brains, the strongest arms. and the brawniest bodies from the avocations of peace and have the naion groaning under the weight of iseless taxation. It does not need to have fewer merchants, fewer intensely alive to-day in their inspirchoolteachers, fewer lawyers and ing examples. Every true soldier knows what I mean by the overministers and mechanics and farmers n order to have more privates and lieutenants and captains and majors and colonels and generals. If we have the right kind of homes, there will be officers and privates ready to protect the country from a foreign foe whenever they are needed.

Where can you find a greater exam-ple of heroism than that exhibited by the colonel of a Pennsylvania regiment. As he was leading in a charge he looked down and saw the upturned face of his own boy. All that he did was to kneel a moment and kiss his child, saying, "Goodby, my darling; goodby!" Then he turnd and waved his sword, crying : "Come on, boys! Come on! Charge and follow me!" Where can you find a greater deed of heroism than that exhibited upon the field of battle when the ambulance corps found among the wounded a boy with both of his eyes shot out. There he sat, holding in his arms the dead body of another boy. They were brothers. As the surgeon's aid came near they heard the blind boy whispering to the dead boy: "Poor Bobby! Poor Bobby! Mamma told me to look after you and I will. Poor Bobby! Poor Bobby!" Ah, in a land of the free and the brave we do not want a greater standing army! We do need, however, more consecrated homes; we do need more fathers and mothers who will build the right kind of family altars; we do need the right kind Christian churches, where those children can be brought in contact with God; we need those Christian boys and girls started in the right kind of avocations. Then when war comes, the Christian homes of the north and the south, the east and the west, will yield up their sons for the battle and their daughters for the field hospitals. The Christian dead of the battlefields are intensely alive to-day in the heavenly recognitions which have been given to them. Impossible is it to suppose that God would allow his servants who were found in ar-mies and who died upon battlefields to go unrewarded. In the beautiful sermon upon the mount Christ pronounced a blessing on those whose lives were full of tears and heartaches, poverty and persecution, slan-der and death. Do not Christ's der and death. words apply to those brave men? Did they not suffer enough? Were not their wounds deep enough? Did not they hunger enough and have homesickness enough? Did not many a fair cheeked boy under his blanket at night sob himself to sleep, or un-able to sleep, keep on crying, "Oh, mother, mother, if I could only see mother!" In one of the national museums I saw a Bible which had saved a soldier's life. When the young man left home, his mother gave it to him. In battle he was carrying it in his coat pocket just over the heart. A flying bullet almost cut its way through the Bible, but it was stopped at one of the leaves of the four gospels. Did not many a dying soldier have one of these Bibles in his hand? Did he not weep over it when he was dying far away from home? Can God forget his Christian soldiers who died upon the battle-neld? No, no! The Bible describes the entrance into heaven of a mighty host marching through the gates as before the reviewing stand of a earthly ruler. St. John in apocalyp-tic vision cried out in rapture as he saw them. "Who are these who are arrayed in white robes, and whence came they?" There must have been many seen by his prophetic eye te

When the English soldiers came back from the Crimean war all Lon-don turned out to greet them. After they had marched past the reviewing tand Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort arose to receive those heroes who were to be decorated with medals. As each soldier approached the Queen, with her own hand, pinned the medal upon the breast of the man she wished to honor. Some of these soldiers had an empty sleeve; some came on crutches; some had their heads bandaged. At last there came a litter. In it was carried the physical wreck of a man. of the rest. Let us go forth to decorate with flowers the graves of the soldiers who died upon the field of battle because their glorious memories still live in our hearts. Let us decorate all the graves alike; let us put just as large a wreath upon the grave of the un-known picket who was shot by the sharpshooter in the moonlight while doing sentinel duty as upon the grave of the most noted general of the war. Let each receive the same meed of honor and the same floral tribute at the hands of their countrymen as the humble color bearer who when the regiment was retreating rallied the men just before he was struck by a bullet and leaped up into the air, crying, "Oh, my God; I'm gone!" and fell dead. Give a hero's garland to the farmer's boy who kissed his mother under the sha dow of the apple tree when he went forth to die. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Every one of the dead heroes paid the greatest of all sacrifices for his country. They gave their lives in order that others might live. And as we, one and all, fellow countrymen, from the north, the down to place the Memorial day flowers upon their graves, may swear before God by the altars the dead that we will oppose with inflexible determination any one who will ever again try to stir up sectional strife. The civil war is dead. By the blood of our loved ones we swear it. The civil war is dead! By the northern regiments which followed Fitz-Hugh Lee and Joe Wheeler and the southern regiments that fol lowed Lawton and Merritt in the Spanish-American war, when north and south fought side by side, we

Then, as we kneel on Memorial day by the altars of the dead soldiers who fell upon American battlefield may we consecrate anew our lives to our country's service. May we realize that when we serve our Lord and Master best, then we serve best our nation. May the sorrow and the agness, the suffering and the deaths we this day commemorate instill in our hearts a profound love of peace and a deeper consecration to Him whose name is the Prince of Peace. Let us labor to so disseminate the teachings of Jesus that war in the future shall become an impossibility. Then shall be only gospel peace. Then the people will not only love Then shall be only gospel peace. Then the people will not only love the Lord their God with all their hearts but they shall love their neighbors as themselves. Then the glory of the Lord shall cover this land as the waters cover the sea.

Culture That Is Best.

Knowledge, thought, common sense—are the equipment of the head. Affection, sentiment, sympathy—these are the equipment of the heart. We call the man without the equipment of the head, a fool. What shall we call the man without the equipment of the heart? We give years of time and great care and attention to the training of the head. Are we, in our-selves or in our children, to let the heart go all untrained? After all, which is the best for a man or woman, which will send us on most happily and helpful in life, a sufficient equipment of knowledge, which is the power of the head, or a sufficient equipment of sympathy, which is the power of the heart? O! it is sad to see the fool of a withered head, but it is pitiful to see the fool of a withered heart. And it is well that we receive with high honor the names of men of genius and of wisdom, but the name that is above every other name is the name of Him who came unto men with the divinest gift of a tender a d loving human heart.

The First London Theater.

The first playhouse to be built in England was the Theater. It was erected in the year 1576, and its builder was James Burbage, father of the famous actor Richard Burbage and himself an actor of some repute. Access to the Theater seems in old times to have been over Finsbury fields. The Curtain, which, curiously, is named from the region or old manor on which the playhouse was erected and not from the familiar drapery of the stage, was situated south of Holywell lane, in Moorsfield (modern Gloucester street), and is first mentioned in the following year, 1577. Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" was among the many plays first acted there. The Theater was moved away to the Bankside, and the old materials were employed in building the Globe, Shakespeare's chief theater, in 1598. The Curtain continued to be used as a playliouse far into the reign of King James. No picture of either of these original theaters has been handed down, and owing to their position without the walls none of the old maps represents their precise location.-Lip-* IF.

Poor Old Lady Beaconsfield. There is nothing in his life, says Lord Ronald, that redounds more to Lord Beaconsfield's credit than the manner in which he treated his wife. She could never have been but a somewhat commonplace though good hearted woman. As she grew old she became a wreck of humanity, but the poor, faded, painted old lady was ever treated by her husband with a deference and regard truly touching. It was painful to see how, in what we are pleased to call the highest society, poor old Lady Beaconsfield was made a butt and a laughing stock. Knowing how sensitive Lord Beaconsfield was to anything approaching ridicule, I felt how bitterly he must have suffered when in a crowded hall or drawing room his hosts would what they called "draw out old Lady Beaconsfield" and laugh at her to her face, showing no reticence, regard or decent feeling for the poor husband, who, imperturbable as he ever appeared, was probably suffering acutely at the conduct of his ill bred hosts:
