THE TREATY AND THE REPUBLICANS.

It would appear that more than ordinary generalship will be required to induce the United States Senate to ratify the fishery treaty. The committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the treaty has been referred, has agreed, it is understood, to report to the Senate a recommendation that the treaty be ratified unless it is amended to meet the views of certain of the senators, who, by the way, are strongly Republican. This simply means that the committee cannot recommend ratification until some other concessions are made at the expense of Canada. The committee has much influence in the Senate, and has, on more than one occasion, succeeded in bringing about the adoption by the body of just as unfavorable a treaty as it has chosen to advance in connection with the treaty now before it. To outguess the committee, therefore, is a task which will call into play ability that we do not often see displayed.

It has not been made to appear that the committee has been actuated from any other than purely patriotic motives. Its republican members have so far failed to establish any important point of American concession, or even the surrender of a privilege which their fellow-citizens or the nation care a whit about. But they seek to magnify the agreement on minor questions, which may have the semblance of American concession, into the appearance of a complete surrender of the main points at issue, as for instance, the limit of exclusion in the case of Fortunate Bay, Nfld. Nothing else but party demands could call for such action, and nothing else than party policy would lead to their support. The rejection, therefore, of the treaty by the Senate will have its significance only in the fact that that body is largely republican.

The republican press have joined the committee on Foreign Relations in its condemnation of the treaty. It is loud in its declaration that American interests have been sacrificed. Our conservative contemporaries, therefore, in their efforts to maintain their contention that Canada's case was not surrendered, quote largely from the republican journals. Such extracts merely go to show to what extent the interests of country may be sacrificed for the interests of party.

The result of the deliberations of the Senate will, however, be looked for in this country with interest.

VACCINATION AS A PREVENTIVE.

The statistics recently issued, of the small-pox epidemic now raging at Sheffield, Eng., and other places in that vicinity are proving in the most singular manner the value of vaccination as a preventive against that dread disease; and, further, the advisability of vaccination on attaining the age of puberty. On the first point the returns show that the estimated number of vaccinated children under ten years of age in Sheffield is about 50,000, and the number unvaccinated about 1,000. Yet among the former there have only been 3 deaths during the epidemic out of 189 children attacked, while among the latter 70 deaths have occurred out of 172 attacks.

The extraordinary significance of the figures will be seen when it is considered that, judging from these results, if all the children had been vaccinated, there would only have been 3 deaths instead of 72, and that if all had remained unvaccinated there would have been 1,330 deaths instead of 72. Thus it is evident that but for the protecting effects of the system now in force in England, the people of Sheffield would have been scourged by one of the most devastating epidemics of fatal disease. The evidence in favor of re-vaccination is perhaps less conclusive, though still very striking. The 300 protected employees of the Sheffield post office have escaped entirely, and scarcely a single case has occurred where a vaccinated person has been attacked. When this is taken in connection with the fact that in the course of half a century there has not been a single case among the nurses and servants of the London small-pox hospital, where patients are constantly being treated, and with extraordinary immunity enjoyed by the 10,000 men employed in the London post service, the efficacy of re-vaccination may be said to have been conclusively demonstrated. There seems little doubt that if the practice of re-vaccination were universal, small-pox would be banished for ever.

A DISREPUTABLE BUSINESS.

"We have got to make this business disreputable," said Moody the Evangelist at Louisville a day or two ago, in speaking of the liquor traffic. If the people of Fredericton would act upon this advice and determine to regard those who sell liquor as disreputable characters, those dealers in the trade would find themselves cut off from intercourse with respectable citizens and would have less to say in the affairs of the city. Everyone knows that certain persons in the city are selling liquor openly in defiance of law and yet they will command their friends to patronize these persons, and will patronize them themselves. If nothing can be done to law the proper authorities carry out the law, those liquor dealers who persist in selling their poisonous draughts should be not only regarded as disreputable, but should be shunned as public enemies and as men who are corrupting the morals of the city. It is high time that something was done to put a stop to such glaring defiance of law as that which we are constantly seeing.

KING KALAKAUA AGAIN.

It is just possible that Hawaii may be called upon to witness another revolution before matters are straightened out in that country. King Kalakaua claimed to have the right to veto bills passed by the legislature while his ministers claimed that he had not. The supreme court to which the matter was referred decided that he had such a right, and now the King is jubilant. He will make it hot for those who have been opposing him. The people are on the side of the minister and may yet in spite of the decision of the court show Kalakaua that if he has the right to veto any act he pleases that he will not be allowed to exercise his prerogative, or that if he attempts to do so he may have another experience similar to that which he was lately made to pass through.

Mr. Bright has replied to a correspondent who forwarded him a copy of a resolution passed at the recent Fair Trade meeting in Birmingham in favor of a retaliatory tariff against foreign States. "We cannot," says the right hon. gentleman, "as freely as we wish to do, and your remedy is to create a tariff here that we may be unable to pay freely. You say that if we are not permitted to sell freely, let us deny ourselves the right to buy freely." Commenting on this, Mr. Bright asks whether it is the policy of men who reason or men who dream.

A CURIOUS LOVE EPIGRAM. In an old book, dated 1830, there is the following very curious love epigram. It is an admirable play upon words. "Madame—Most worthy of admiration! After long consideration and much painful reflection on the great reputation you possess in the nation I have a strong inclination to become your relation. In your approbation of this declaration I shall make preparation to remove my abode to a safe convenient station to prove my admiration; and if such obligation is worthy of observation, and can obtain commendation, it will be an agreeable addition to my calculation of the joy and exultation of your, Sir, San Disillusionment. The following is the still more curious epigram, which I present you on relation with much deliberation, at the great instigation of your imagination, to show such veneration on so eligible a foundation. After examination and serious contemplation, I supposed your imagination was the fruit of recreation, and had sprung from ostentation to display your education by an old conceit, or rather a multiplication of words of the same termination, though of great variation, in each respective signification. Now, with out disparagement, your laborious application is so tedious an occupation, that I am not prepared to think it a sufficient gratification, I am without doubt, a poor man, Mary McFarlane.
