The Minister of Public Works agreed with Mr. Shea as regarded the damage done to roads and bridges and he also referred to the excessive speed at which they ran in the country, where they jeopardise not only property but human life. The roads were only kept in order with limited means to do so. Mr. Kent agreed with Mr. Shea in every particular, In fixing these taxes the Council only wished to obtain its own

A tax for possible damage to extern roads and bridges was a seperate matter and should be kept distinct from the Council's fees for driving within the city limits. It would be a pity to divide the monies collected. The Council in making these estimates had before them only their own requirements and it was proposed to devote half to objects which the Council did not contemplate. Mr. Kent deplored the damage done to roads and bridges, the destruction of horses, &c., but, like Mr. Shea, he thought it unfair and unwise to divide this tax. Mr. Emerson was also se vere in his condemnation of the running of cars over the roads and was glad to see that the owners would be taxed.
