Wind Cramp.

By RUTH CAMERON.

If you keep any part of your body, such as your arm, in some cramped position for a long time you will find it difficult to move it from that position.

Now it seems to me that the same thing is true of the mind. Cramp the mind in some position for a long time, then remove the pressure, and you will probably find that the power to move the mind back to its normal trend is weakened or even gone—at least temporarily.

I am thinking especially of the mind cramp of economy.

Who does not know some of these unfortunate people who have been forced by circumstances to practise a cruelly strict economy and whose minds have become so rigidly set in that direction that even when the pressure passes they cannot relax?

I was talking with a woman of this type the other day. Someone spoke about a doctor's bill. A worried look came into her face. "Aren't doctors' bills terrible?" she said. "I have one coming on the first of the month and it worries the life out of me." Now I happened to know that the size of her husband's income is such that she has absolutely no reason to worry about doctors' bills. Her anxiety is simply a reflex of the days when such extras painfully upset the delicate balance that then existed between income and outgo. Those days have long since passed, and yet she can't shake off her anxiety over such expenses.

Another woman, a widow, for years practised the most rigid economy in order to educate her daughter. The daughter has now married very comfortably and the mother's income, small for two but ample for one, is augmented by lavish gifts from her and by a small inheritance. And yet, last year this woman felt obliged to do without a much needed suit because she had to make some small repairs on her house.

There is absolutely no need of her saving and contriving and scrimping any longer, but she cannot stop. Her mind is so strongly bent that way that not even her daughter's pleadings can unbind it.

Still another case is that of a middle aged couple who are on the verge of separation. They used to be a singularly happy pair. During the years in which the husband was building up his business the wife was a wonderful helpmeet, especially in making one dollar do the work of two. To-day there is no longer any need for such economy; the husband wants to live in the comfort which they have earned; the wife refuses to let him; and the dissensions thus engendered actually threaten to wreck their lives.

Of course I do not blame anyone for wanting to live simply and without extravagance. I am the last to urge that expenditures should keep pace with income, but I do think that over rigid economy tends to dry up one's sources of happiness.

We are quick to relax the body when it is no longer necessary to keep it in a cramped position. The mind should be treated as well. Indeed, one should take even more care of it, for the discomforts of mind cramp usually have to be borne by others besides ourselves.

GLAD NEWS TO ALL WITH BAD COLDS INSTANT RELIEF—FEW HOURS FOR CURE

Nothing Known to Science is so Invariably Sure to Cure as "Cattarrhozone."

Just Breathe Cattarrhozone!

The Ozonated Air Cure, better known as "Cattarrhozone" is death to colds.

Its health-laden fumes contain the leading balsams of the pine woods. Soothing and antiseptic, it gives instant relief—stops gagging, hawking and sneezing.

Mucous and phlegm are cleared away, breathing made easy, and Cattarrh symptoms entirely disappear. Delightful and pleasant is Cattarrhozone, simple to use because you breathe it—sure to cure colds and catarrh because it destroys the cause. Doctors say nothing is more scientific, nothing possesses such might of merit in winter ills.

"To clear a cold out of your nostrils and to be able in a minute or two to breathe freely again, I can't conceive of anything better than Cattarrhozone," writes J. H. Galvin, of Port Limon, O. B. For any sort of Catarrh, throat trouble or Bronchitis, Cattarrhozone is a specific. I know scores of people who use Cattarrhozone and all speak wonders of its merit."

Divorced Life

by Helen Hesson Fuestle

Another Lesson in Feminism

Marian missed Barker to an astonishing degree. It had been great fun to prow around town with him. She realized now that had her prospects at writing not brightened the future for her, she might have given ear to the things she fancied he might have said to her, had she afforded him any real encouragement.

"Foolish," she smiled. "Quit flattering yourself."

She was profoundly thankful, however, that a career which promised independence had magically opened up, and that if she should ever decide to marry again, urgent economic need would not control her decision.

The last busy month's events had been filled with that social and emotional excitement of which Marian had been all but wholly deprived since her enchanting years at college. The bleak period of her married life in a strange city, with Frank's income never enough to meet the demands upon it, had been a social desert for her. And to-day, after the abrupt cessation of her interesting experiences first with Meadows, then with Barker, she felt intensely lonely. She was neither in the mood for reading or for writing. Mrs. Kern, mistress of the boarding house, paused at the door to leave some electric light globes, and Marian, glad of a chance to talk to somebody, made her come in and be seated.

"I seem to have done nothing but climb stairs to-day," puffed Mrs. Kern. "I can't stop more than a minute or two. Have to keep an eye on that new cook of mine. Upon my word, you've become the most popular person in the house," she rattled on. "It has reminded me of myself—when I was a guest at the Prince Henry," she sighed, the memories that filled her mind sweeping to the surface. "To look at me now, you wouldn't believe it. I've put on weight something scandalous. My poor husband loved to see me thin, so I dieted religiously. He traveled a good deal, you know, before his death. He was a perfect dear. Never the least bit jealous of the attentions of other men at the hotel. Perfectly grand of him. I used to think."

"Rather unusual, I should say, for a man with such a charming wife," replied Marian. "Wasn't he afraid someone might steal you during his absence?"

"He knew he could trust me," was the answer. Memories of the past overcame Mrs. Kern, and for half a minute she wept quietly.

Here was a little tragedy which never failed to impress Marian every time she heard Mrs. Kern refer with wistful regrets to the days when she was a guest at the Prince Henry. From that easy station in life to the toil of a boarding-house keeper struck Marian as a woeful descent.

Why was it, she often wondered,

Chick Grandill.

Red McGhee says:

In base ball Chick has been like a bat that never knows just where it's at. It's around a clear blind. He played the game down south in Mex, up there in Canada "Rex" with George's name is signed, an outfit teams an high school teams before he rose to Griffith's pennant threats. He pitched an' caught an' played fly-chase before he got the hunch first base was best of all the bets.

Two years ago when Griff took hold of Washington's poor strugglin' field he had no first at all. He started diggin' in his jeans, brought forth ten thousand round iron beans, bought Chic from Montreal. Chic filled the gap. He started great. The team capped seventeen a m e s straight right after he began. Since Chic arrived they've been up front an' always in the pennant hunt. Some change for just one man!

Chic hefts up near 200 stone an' stands six-two of grit an' bone. Some fieldin' measure that. An' that same build just fills the bill when Chic lays up against the pill with his big clean up bat. He doesn't waste his safety whacks. They come when men are on the sacks with runs to win the game. McGhee tops him in the dope, but Grandill won't give up the hope he'll swipe the Mackman's fame.

Where Responsibility Lies.

No matter how large, or how small, a business may be, nobody can deny that its Office is the nerve centre of the firm. Every transaction, important or trivial, must be recorded at the Office. An order is recorded at the Office,—its history is recorded at the Office, and finally payment is received at the Office. If the Office makes an error the firm stands the loss. That's why you must be sure that your office is modern and dependably equipped for the care of all important papers. To do this effectively you need the up-to-date equipment of the "GLOBE-WERNICKE CO." When sixty offices in St. John's have found this necessity this equipment can surely be of use to you. Mr. Percie Johnson represents this world known firm in Newfoundland. —ADVT.
