When a fine of $1 was imposed he lapsed into the deepest gloom, and failed to see the joke.

Perhaps the thinks he does. But the writer has seen a beaver busily at work cutting down timber for a dam early in June. The prudent beaver, like the prudent man, begins his work betimes. If he were a chronic fault-finder, like the World man, he would find himself in the hole in the fall, when his lodge is needed for shelter.

A London Boy's Achievements.

Mr. Geo. Bullen (brother of W. F. Bullen, London, Ont.) is the richest maltster in the United States. That's what his friends say. He made his money. He went out of London, Canada, when a boy, without any destination. He traveled in his own way until he reached the border and crossed over. Everybody who hadn't a cent in those days had two places in sight. One was Milwaukee, the other West. Young Bullen chose the latter. He went out in a procession of teams. He reached the Eldorado with a scout. He did chores; he clerked; he trafficked; he made and saved several hundred dollars, came back to the States, went to Kenosha, Wis., kept books for Lill, soon became a partner, and then came to Chicago. By that time the exodus from Milwaukee had begun. In brief, Mr. Geo. Bullen, from a penniless boy 35 years ago, has pulled up beyond the one million notch. He never gave up when he was struggling. In every-day English he kept pegging away.—[Chicago Tribune.]
