"Ay, sure; and I wouldn't wonder a bit," said the stout hostess, smoothing down her ample skirts, "if she didn't bide long hehind her; for a thin long slip of a thing she is, and no more red on her cheek than the very snow, and I've heard say that such like troubles run in the blood. Why, poor girl had her bread to work for, like prest on us—and a weakly white thing was if there were ne'er another; but she nught herself a young lady sure enow, and at mun she do but go and be a governess, they ca' it. Her mother was a prideful dy, to have nothing, and so was miss; but ay. she was gone to be a governess to the Regiot's lady sisters; but I donna know what's their name, now where they live, and please, sir, that's all I can tell you. The talkative landlady recollected other scrapes of goasip however, before she suffered as good a listener to escape her. The subdued and quiet life of the mother and daughter—the proud poverty that made no sign—the privations which were guessed at mysterious letters—the little incidental and unconscious touches which revealed through a mist of verbisge something of the second Lilias, in the fresh youth which knew no eares but those of poverty, and in the first paralysis and stuper of hor heavy grief. But the other figure—the sad Naomi leaning on the girl's arm, and sinking, amid hardship and the chill pains of penury, into a stranger's grave—ever new touch did but deepen the sad old colors of the picture, and this was the lofty Lily of the old man's dreamer the sunny and joyous daughter of Green shaw.

The next morning Mossgray left the Camberland gleu, resolving, if his search did not prosper in Sectiand, to return when the reverend ruler of the little dale should have returned to his flock and his dominions.
He remembered however with annoyance, when he had reached Carlisle on his way home, that he had not ascertained the Rector's name. It had not been mentioned by his premative parisinoners, to whom "the Rector" was the title of titles; but Mossgray resolved to make immediate inquiry of Mrs. Ferdle, whose eldest daughter had married an English clergyman somewhere in this same district. He would write also to Walter Johnstone; he would advertise if other means failed, call on the second Lillies to honor the bequest her mother had made him. The trust was more sacred now than over; it was cough that one had gone down uncomforted to the grave.
