He spoke of the peculiar attraction of the city of Toronto, which makes all legislators of Ontario come to see from her viewpoint just so soon as they have become members of the Government or the cabinet. While the Western University was clamoring for assistance, the Hygienic Institute was thrown out to it as a sop, but without money to run it or the necessary equipment, it was of no use.

Now some provision has at length been made to carry on the work it was intended for, but as yet it has been of no practical benefit to the arts department, for which help is so much desired.

"We have a right to assistance from the public chest." said Dr. Moorhouse, the Public chest." said Dr. Moorhouse, Tit is to the multiplication of university in the multiplication of university in the public chest." said Dr. Moorhouse, the Public chest." said Dr. Moorhouse, the Public States and Germany that these countries owe their great progress in recent years in all departments of the arts and sciences."

To the young men about to receive their degrees, Dr. Moorhouse pointed out that they had only barely entered upon the threshold of their life-work, and he counselled them to be persevering and earnest in the pursuit of their calling.

The special prizes were then presented, the gold medal going to Dr. Cyril O, Imrie and the silver medal to Dr. A. S. Duncan.

Rev. Richard Whiting, B. A., of the first Methodist Church, delivered the baccalaureate address, in which hereferred to the evidences of camaraderie which existed between the graduating class and the students of the other years. Good-naturedly he bandled repartee with the students at the rear, who interpolated his remarks with impromptu humor of their own.

To the graduating class, he said: "Do the best that you can, with the help of the highest in you." As an example worthy for them to follow in their profession he reminded them of old Dr. McClure, in Ian Maclaren's glory.

The convocation was quieter and

HOTELS WILL ACT AS THEY SEE FIT

At the annual medical convocation of the Western University, which was sheld yesterday afternoon in the Auditorium, with Vice-Chancellor Dr. Moorhouse presiding, 23 newly-fledged doctors of medicine took the hypocratic oath, which was read by Dr. Ferguson, and received their degrees at the hands of Dr. Moorhouse.

The venerable vice-chancellor, in a brief address, which opened the proceedings of the afternoon, spoke of the 29 years of successful work accomplished by the medical department since its institution, until it has grown from ten students in the bestinning to the enrollment of the past year, which was 129.

In the 29 years of its growth and development the Medical College has seen out to the world nearly four hundred graduates. He referred to the undenominational character of the Western University, in which there is no church ascendancy, and all creeds and churches have equal privileges and rights. He with others hoped that ere long there would be added to the faculties of arts and medicine a new faculty of law.

CORRESPONDENCE

After reading the comment of mallman, re city hall, I think form. He compared the arduous course of the medical curriculum with the stern task of mountain-climbing, and expressed the regret of the class at parting from their alma mater, from ehe faculty of their college, and their class and college mates. After creating some amusement at the expense of the class of 1914, he addressed some parting remarks to the members of the sophomore and junior years. His address was bright and sointillating with humor and witticisms.

Dr. Weekes, who replied on behalf of the faculty, made a clever address, the graduating class, whom he counselled to be gentlemen at all times, to never deceive anyone, not even a child; to never tell all they know; to keep well but not foppishly dressed, and to be always on their job.

"If you have any spare time," he keep well but not foppishly dressed, and to be always on their job.

"If you have any spare time," he said; "keep in or near your office—especially in the early years of your practice—you may be called when the other fellow is out."

Degrees Conferred.

After the oath had been administered to the graduating class by Dr. Ferguson, the students were introduced by Dr. Eecles to the vice-chancellor, who conferred the degrees, while the diplomas were awarded by Dr. Waugh.

The special prizes were then presented, the gold medal going to Dr. Gyril O, Imrie and the silver medal to Dr. A. S. Duncan.
