fears facts no more than factions. It has nothing to fear, nothing to conceal, it welcomes genuine criticism, now so rare, but has no respect for the false.
The drift of thought in our country has reached a point when the subject suggested by the text demands a treatment that it did not call for half a century ago. The hostility to the Bible as the inspired Worl of God has become pronounced, and the Incarnation the critical for chirtisality, is openly assailed by men who cat the bread and wear the respective liveries of the most of the denominations now dividing the Christian people of the land, hastening on sectarians to their destined end. The subject is therefore invested with a new interest, and the New Testument must be defended at all points. The listory of Mary is so related to the Incarnation that it cannot be ignored. It is in-defence of the Bible itself that we now treat the story of the Virgin, who, in the 'strength of her native purity, rose superior to ancleat aspection.

Openly the account of the Nativity is pronounced a "myth," like the sublime story of the creation. Mary, in the hands of preudo crudition, of Protestant professors, becomes a fraudulent character. Even as they identify Abraham with a doubtful Arab shelk, so they find the genesis of Mary in an obscure Hebrew adventuress. He was deeply moved, and eculed scarcely find words to express. his gratitude, Long years gone by he had learned to appreciate their love, and their generosity. There required ne display of this kind to prove it. If they had a beautiful church and house, all on a good financial basis, they owed it to their own generosity and hard work. If he had accomplished much with a poor congregation, it was because they were a generous people, who strengthened his hands in everything he undertook. There was another streat work of which he was yet more proud, and which stood forth as conspicuously as the impasing buildings, it was the great moral transformation which took place since the parish was formed in 1890. Again, for this he would take no credit. God had found generous souls, stimulated with faith, and He had given the increase. He respect thruit front his grateful soil.

The paqior thanked them once more for higher magnificent present, and for their devotadness to their priest. His sampest desire was that he might continue, confidence, and love.

In a few well-clusen vords Vather Mungovan, of St. Michey Art College, Toronto, cumplimented Father Brady on the line work he and his parishioners had accomplished. Everything he saw surpassed his expectations. Both the magnificent house, and the evening's gathering spoke not only of financial shilly but Christian secreosity and good-will.
