The execution of the chief conspirator, Placido, has given the last blow to the insurrection. A letter from Hamiltonian construction is the construction of this construction. Havannah gives the following account of the last moments of this remarkable man, who (it is stated) met his death with a heroic calmess that produced universal sympathy:

Nothing was positively known of the decision of the Council concerning him, till it was rumoured a few days since that he would proceed, along with others, to the "Chapel" for the con-On the appointed day a crowd was assembled, and Placido was seen walking along with singular composure under circumstances so gloomy, smoking a cigar, and saluting with graceful case his numerous acquaintances. Are you aware what the punishment of the "Chapel" means? It is worse a thousand the punishment of the "Chapel" means? It is worse a thousand the death of which it is the sure precursor. Placido was seen walking along with singular composure under In black, and dimly lighted. Priests are there to chant in se-pulchral voice the service of the dead, and the coffins of the vation of the horror of the coming death! Placido emerged from the Chapel cool and undismayed, whilst the others were nearly or entirely overcome by the agonies they had already undergone. The chief conspirator held a crucifix in his hand, and recited the construction of the chief conspirator held a crucifix in his hand, and recited the construction of the chief conspirator held a crucifix in his hand, and recited the construction of the chief conspirator held a crucifix in his hand, and recited the construction of the chief conspirator held a crucifix in his hand, and recited the chief construction of the construction and recited in a loud voice a beautiful prayer in verse, which thrillupon the hearts of the attentive masses which lined the road he passed. On arriving at the fatal spot he sat down on a bench with his back turned, as ordered, to the military, and nd rapid preparations were made for his death. It was well known that in some affecting poem written by Placido in pri-son, he had said it would be useless to seek to kill him by shooting his body, that they must strike his heart to make it cease its throbbings. And now the dread hour had arrived—at the last moment he arose, and said "adios monda" (alieu world) world) and sat calmly down. The word was given, and five balls entered his body. Amid the murmurs of the horror-struct. struck spectators he got up, and turned his head upon the shrinking soldiers, his face wearing an expression of superhuman course. man courage; "Will no one have pity on me?" he said.—

"Here!" (pointing to his heart) "fire here!" At that instant two balls pierced his heart, and he fell dead whilst his words still echoed in our ears.—Nineteen other insurgents were shot at the shot at the same time with Placido.

France and England.—A cabinet Council, summoned the Real Council of the Council o FRANCE AND ENGLAND.—A cabinet Council, summoned by the Earl of Aberden, was held at the Foreign Office on Tuesday, Sir Robert Peel and others of the Cabinet Ministers who had left town only the preceding Saturday, returning thither for the purpose of attending it.

from the French Government, down to that moment, upon the subject of Tabiri, had been anything but satisfactory. We believe that we shall not greatly err if we add that they continue of the same character. We do not pretend to know what have been the precise demands of England, or what portion of those demands France has manifested a reluctance to comply with; but we do know that our demands, as a whole, remain unsatisfied. Whether they admit of any modification which, without essentially diminishing their spirit, may render them more palatable to the French Government, we cannot say. It is not improbable they were framed in the first instance with a view to meet such a contingency, upon the principle of asking more to meet such a contingency, upon the principle of asking more than we expect in order to get what we want.

Of one thing we feel perfectly assured—the honour of the Crown and the safety of Englishmen will not be complimented away even for the sake of peace, which it is the anxious desire of both Governments to maintain. No men understand better than Sir Robert Peel and the Earl of Aberdeen the utter worthlessness of a peace which is purchased by the sacrifice of national character. They only are allowed to be at peace who are known to have the power of punishing any attempt to disturb it.—The John Ball.
