THE CROSS OF PEREZ.

A TRADITION OF THE WEST.

should be possess love for archicological research, would not be rewarded, perhaps, by any remarkable " find," but he would be puzzled to account for the relative frequency of a certain Spanish name carved on the walls of the canyons and in the limited number of small limestone caves to be met with in the central and western portion of the State, particularly along the margin of the numerous streams which flow southeastwardly into the Arkansas and the Smoky Hill. In the very heart of the Rocky Mountains, in Mortana, at a point where the Missouri is so small that a man may easily step across it, there is a spring which a volume as large as your arm, and it is one of the sources of the mighty river. Here again may the strange name be seen, and immediately above it, on the smooth side of the towering mountain which forms the west wall of the canyon, is a cross cut in the basalt, whose arms the United States Government to discover the source of the Missouristop of the mountain. They did so lov-They were surprised to find the symbol ingly and laid him down. Many years ago, when I, a young officer of the army, was stationed

AMONG THOSE INDIANS,

there was a tradition that the eldest men of the tribe used to relate around campfires of a white man who, many years before, lived by himself in the "Range," and whose memory all the tribe revered for his uniform kindness and deeply religious spirit. He was "Good Medinearly all his time, when not min-istering to their wants, on the Thodog was in Egypt as he is with use top of the mountain near the spring, at the same time a friend and useful ser munion with the "Great Spirit," and that it was he who had carved the cross on the wall of the canyon. "Percz" is the Spanish name to be found in the various places described. As nearly as I have been able to trace the history of this religious recluse, who voluntarily shut himself up in the fastuess of the Rocky Mountains, with no companions but the Indians, he was the son of one of tinguished family and of his noble esdescendant of the great Alphonso. He wished that his son might have a passion for arms, for which his ancestors his father permission to become a priest. but was refused. The old grandee saw that in the celebacy the Church demanded of its devotees the transmission by descent of the proud family of Perez would be stopped, and he grew furious at the request of his son. He stated that he would rather see him dead than have him don the cassock. These were but the natural effusions of an angry man, but they were overheard by an emissary of the Inquisition and conveyed with much exaggeration to its ministers. Only a short time after the unfortunate words had been uttered the Court of Inquisition held a session. Before them stood a culprit, the father of Don Diego Perez. He was charged with treasonable words against the kingdom and the Holv Church. The old man attempted to explain how he was driven by his passion to say what in itself had not the slightest ingredient of harm, but he was silenced and sent to a dungeon to await the pleasure of the king.

The son, meanwhile, devoted himself to his father. He repaired to the king, who listened to him, though he was coldly informed that he refused to interfere with the edict of the Inquisition. He pleaded with all the eloquence and earnestness of his nature for his father's release, but was instantly ordered to cease and listen to his own sentence. This was then read to him from a parchment, dominions of Spain within fifteen days under

With all his mortal hopes now blighted, Don Diego looked to Heaven, and from his lips breathed a whispering prayer to God and His angels; then the demon of despair fled from his bleeding heart, and resignation spread her pinions over its abraded surface. A few days afterwards Don Diego was on the broad Atlantic. On landing at a Northern port he proceeded to Louisiana, and in a little while went into the wilderness, a missionary among the Indians to enligthen their minds and improve their condition by teaching them Christian precepts. Following the course of the Missouri to the mouth of the Kansas River, he crossed that now great gushes out of the wall of andurated rock in a volume as large as your arm, and it is spread the light of the living Gospel. At last he reached the range of mountains which held the fountains of the Missouri, and, as his season of life was far advanced, resolved to pass the remnant of his days among the Shoshones. escape the crew of rapacions curs. These dogs roaming about are nowadays less numerous and ferocious, but they are sometimes terrible for strangers. It has often happened to me when passing through toward midnight, some village of Egypt to be reminded in meeting these beasts of that "bould dogue" of a novel of Dickens, who was a "biter of men and a killer of children for fun, who ordinarily lived on the right side of the street, but also kept in hiding on the left side, ready to spring at the throat of the first passer-As it is under Towik Pacha, so it was in the time of Rameses II, and my experience at this day enables me to understand exactly what our scribe wanted to say in the passage just cited. The deg in ancient Egypt was a God: he was even several gods, of whom the best known, "the barker Anubis" of the latin poets, was a chacal. As there were canada had this difference that we imcemeteries for cats, so there were cemeteries for dogs, where munimies of them are found by the thousand. I have seen these munifies at Syout, at Sheikh-Faal, at Feshn, at Sagguarah, even at Theles, and most Egyytian museums possess specimens more or less well preserved. One of these muramies was recently unto which was appended the royal seal. It stated that he should leave the mann. It was that of a greyhound about cighteen months old. There was nothing left of it but bones and skin. As in the case of human munimies, the head was covered with a pasteboard mask, reprepainted in dark brown, except about the eyer, the lips and the nostrils, all of which are white: the mouth is partly open, disclosing the teeth, and the ears vere erect.

It is a pity that objects of this kind have been up to this time so little studied. A certain number of species of dogs have been identified from ancient paintings, and the different naturalists who research have not always arrived at the same clusions. The mummies would furnish certain elements to aid in the study, and would enable the naturalists to supple ment the testimony—often deceiving—of the monuments. This defect in Egyptology seems likely to be remedied. For twenty years and more European compa-nieshave made merchandise of the Egyptian necropolises of animals. Last year there was a large export of mummy cats to England, but only once in an age are mumnies of oxen, gazelles, chacals or other dogs shipped to Trieste or other Mediterranean ports. The day when Eu-ropean naturalists will take hold of the study of mummy animals is probably near at hand.

Trade With the West Indies. Hon, Mr. Wark drew attention in the Senate last week to the advisability of the Government taking steps to encourage trade between Canada and the British West Indies. He supported his question by a lengthy and interesting speech upon the trade question, urging the abolition of the discriminatory clauses in European treaties. Hon. Mr. Abbott explained that the Government had done all that was possible to promote and revivity trade with the West Indies. The Finance Minister had not only made a personal trip to the islands, but the Government had endeavoured to encourage commerce by the very suc-cessful exhibit at Jamaica and by the subsidies to three lines of steamships. Unfortunately Canada was not in the same position as the United States, act to reciprocate with the West Indies. Canada had this difficulty, that we imported hardly anything from them upon which we could relax the duty. Since we had reduced the sugar duties we did not trade with the Indies in any article which paid heavy duty. The attention yourself. Awful Disasters in Spain-Callous Indifference of those in Safety.

Consaguera, who was an eye-witness of the disaster says:— The storm was accompanied by terrific thunder and lightning. While I was standing near the town hall i was startled by hearing the mayor shouting from the balcony of his residence to the guards to run to the river as the waters were flooding the houses. We found the water already in some places neck high. With much difficulty we saved thirty people. The mayor prescritly arrived on the scene and appealed to all those possessing earts to assist in transporting people to the upper part of the town. Only three persons responded, although two hundred possessed carts. The same difficulty was experienced in obtaining the ropes, ladders and picks necessary for re-cuing people in danger. The callons indifference of those in safety contributes to a great extent to the enormous fatal-Even those whose houses were thooded seemed incapable of realizing their danger. The storm having abated they believed all danger past and refused to move. Torrents speedily commenced to run from the mountain gorges in all directions into the valley. Thus the day passed and at night many people, in spite of warning, went to sleep in their threatened dwellings. Soon the storm commenced again with redoubled violence. The river rose by leaps and bounds and carried everything before it with resistless fury. It was an awful light to see. The houses collapsed one after another and were swallowed up in the seething torrent. Daybreak saw nundreds of men and boys struggling in the water and whirled along so rapidly that they were in a moment lest. The misery existing at Consaguera is great. The gendermes are often obliged to resort to force to compel men to assist in recovering bodies. So far 145 corpses have been recovered. The National Relief Fand bas received $100,000. The town of Employene has been converted into an island, by the flood and communication with the town is almost impossible. The storm wrought immense in Murcia, Saragossa and damage Malaga. The railways works at Ronda were greatly damaged. Three persons were drown dand many cattle perished.
