

RUM ROMANCE AT GIRL'S TRIAL

Mrs. Edith Stevens, 19, Denies Helping Casse Smuggle Liquor from Bermuda.

New York, July 31.—A rum-running romance was revealed in the United States District Court in Brooklyn when Mrs. Edith Stevens, nineteen, was arraigned on an indictment charging conspiracy to smuggle liquor into New York from Bermuda.

The girl was indicted as an accomplice of Antonio Casse, millionaire tobacco merchant of Ozone Park, who is said to have financed a huge plot to land numerous boatloads of whiskey here. Two of the vessels have been seized and Casse is sought as a fugitive from justice following forfeiture of a bond of $5,000.

Casse was also the alleged owner of the yacht Edith, which was seized by the government with 1,800 cases of liquor aboard on March 26 at Bayville. The court was told yesterday that Casse, who is forty-five, had named the yacht Edith for Mrs. Stevens. The latter was said to have been separated from her husband.

Testimony brought out by the federal attorney at the trial of Capt. Charles Oman of the Edith was to the effect that a woman had directed the loading of the Edith at Bermuda with a cargo of liquor and had accompanied the vessel to New York, occupying the cabin with Casse. Neither was on the yacht when it was captured. Oman was convicted and sent to the federal penitentiary at Atlanta for a year and a day.

On the same day that Casse jumped the bond of $5,000, Mr. Brancato said, the tobacco merchant sent the trawler Ripple from Brooklyn to take on another cargo of liquor at Bermuda. The prosecutor said Casse and Mrs. Stevens went to the Columbia street dock to see the vessel sail. He alleges that they then left on a faster yacht and reached Bermuda before the Ripple. He charges they arranged for the cargo of liquor, helping put it aboard the trawler.

$30,000 Liquor Seized.

The Ripple anchored off Ambrose Light on the return to New York and half of the cargo was transferred to smaller craft to smuggle ashore. Under cover of darkness the Ripple docked at the foot of Columbia street, and while the remainder of the load was being discharged to motor launches the vessel was raided and captured by federal agents. About $30,000 worth of liquor was confiscated.

Mrs. Stevens was unable to furnish the $20,000 bond which the court fixed upon the instance of Assistant United States Attorney Peter J. Brancato. To keep the girl from remaining in jail, however, the court set the date of trial for today. She will be defended by Wallace E. J. Collins, former United States attorney and counsel for Casse. The alleged conspiracy of Casse, Mrs. Stevens and Joseph Bartolin, chauffeur for Casse, to smuggle liquor into New York was revealed when a pilot bottle in the harbor recently between federal prohibition agents and the crew of the rum-running trawler Ripple resulted in the capture of the vessel and the disclosure that it was owned by the tobacco merchant.

Until the seizure of the Ripple, Casse had apparently intended to stand trial on the indictment in connection with the Edith. But when the ownership of the Ripple was also traced to him, despite the fact that he was a pilot bottle, Casse made good his escape, taking a small fortune in cash, revealed by his bank withdrawals.

Mrs. Stevens denied that she was implicated in the rum-smuggling plot with Casse. She admitted she had made the trip to Bermuda on the Edith, but said she had no knowledge of the Ripple.

Perley G. Black was arrested here on Saturday on a warrant charging him with obtaining money under false pretences. Sheriff Foster of Woodstock took the prisoner to Woodstock on Saturday evening. It is alleged that Black, while in the employ of the Hartland Observer, appropriated to his own use the sum of $600.

MORE WORDS OF ENCOURAGEMENT AT CHAUTAUQUA

Messages of encouragement were delivered in the Chautauqua week-end programme by George H. Turner, who was the lecturer on Saturday afternoon and also spoke at the service in the tent last night. The Dunbar White Hussars, led by William Maupin members of a nine-piece brass band delighted the audiences with concert entertainment on Saturday afternoon and evening and supplied the music at yesterday evening's services. On Saturday morning the superintendent, W. W. Schumaker, gave an address on woman and the new age.

At the session of the Junior Chautauqua on Saturday morning, preparations for the pageant were made and the leading parts assigned.

The title of Mr. Turner's address in the afternoon was "Toward the Goal," and in it he said that the goal of social justice was being approached. The Christian nations were not thinking of war now, he said, and this was a great step to the abolition of war. He thought the people of Canada were lucky not to be embroiled in the violent social upheaval going on in the United States. He reviewed the uplifting spirit of sacrifice brought about by the war and the slump back to the old selfish living afterwards. He thought the present generation were carrying their burden well, especially along the lines of religion. The American peoples were fortunate in being in domination of a continent whose peoples understood each other and each other's language. There was never a time, he said, when the wealth of the world was so equally distributed and the working man received more. The goal was a social one, he concluded, but the work was individual, each having a part to do.

At the service last night, Rev. A. L. Tedford assisted the Chautauqua leaders in the devotional exercises. Mr. Turner preached a powerful sermon on the story of the feeding of the 5,000 with the few loaves and fishes, and said that it emphasized that the human life was spiritual and not physical.

Charlie Ross, aged nine, and Jim Lee, a Chinaman, aged twenty-five, were suffocated yesterday while attempting to escape from a burning building in Charlottetown. Other persons were rescued by firemen through upstairs windows.
