The Appeal to Cowardice

The St. John Standard boasts that in 1812 the Canadian people routed the Americans and drove them out of this country. The Canadians of 1812 were able to protect themselves.

But the Canadians of today, according to the Standard, are such a poor, pulling, drivelling set of cowards that they cannot trust themselves to sell hay, potatoes, lumber and fish to the Americans without danger of losing their loyalty or being gobbled up by their neighbor.

Today, among self-respecting and reasonable people on both sides of the border, with the hearty approval of King George and the people of the Mother Country, there is a movement to celebrate the hundred years of peace. But the demagogues, the enemies of peace and good neighborhood on this side of the border, are seeking advantage in a political campaign by appealing to the fears, the prejudices and the hatreds of a hundred years ago. Shame to them.
