The Prince's Debts.
The debts of the Prince of Wales have long been the topic of conversation in London and the theme of correspondence. Mr. Pechin is, probably, the only London correspondent who has not mentioned them within the last six months. A few months ago it was stated that Mr. Gladstone had been pressed to ask Parliament to satisfy the clamorous creditors of the late apparent, then Mr. Disraeli was accused of having the subject under consideration, and then it was announced that the Queen had determined to pay the debts out of her own purse. Just as the public had got fairly settled down to the conviction that this was true, and that it was an eminently quiet and proper method of settling a family matter of the kind, the London Telegraph semi-officially declared that the Queen had agreed to pay the Prince's debts, that neither Mr. Gladstone nor Mr. Disraeli had been asked to call on Parliament to pay the Prince's debts, and that the Prince had contracted no debts. This announcement, appearing in the particular place (immediately preceding the leading article) that has been consecrated from time immemorial to paragraphs "inspired" by royalty or based on private information, created no end of incredulous comment. Is it possible that the Prince is not in debt? Would the Telegraph make such an announcement without high authority? Why was not the Times trusted with the paragraph? Was not the paper imposed on? Such were the questions in everybody's mouth. And how is it to be got that the London Times denies that the Queen has paid the debts, and that they are to be paid out of the Prince's own property.

It is unfortunate for the Prince that he has nothing else to do but get his debts, and it would be personally advantageous to him and pecuniarily profitable to the nation if he could be employed in some way. His income is large, and we should suppose he might be able to get the necessary capital to spend himself and family, and maintain his dignity even among the wealthy aristocracy of England, without contracting debts. If there is nothing in rank, blood, or position to dignify a man, if the apparent is completely spent, and more money than Albert Grant in order that he may hold his head higher, there is a good excuse for the Prince's extravagance and the best of reasons for asking Parliament to pay his debts; but if the Prince's position is anything like that of the public, it is not possible that he should have the ability to make a greater display of horses, liveries, etc., than any landed aristocrat or wealthy parvenu in the country, then there is no excuse for his debts and no sensible reason in asking Parliament to pay them.

The Schleswig Question.
The paragraph in the cable news about England and Russia being willing to accede to the re-cession of Schleswig to Denmark is not easy to understand. It is not possible that Germany would give back the Province without compensation, as the German Emperor has consented to the terms on which Bismarck is reported to have offered to restore it—the union of Denmark with Germany. Judging by the Copenhagen letter of the London Times correspondence, as the German Emperor does not recognize the possibility of restoring Schleswig to Denmark. He says: "Of the facts recently brought before the public I shall have much to say in the most glowing. I premise that the hostility of the Prussian officials is especially directed against the papers which invoke the Fifth Article of the Prague Treaty. In the small town of Amberg, a newspaper called the Freie Presse, in the most excited periods of the national warfare, and during the actual military occupation of the town by the Prussians, this intemperate paper managed to live on unharmed, and though surrounded by suspicious eyes it has never incurred even the slightest punishment. The editor of the Freie Presse was arrested by his son, who had served in the Danish army, and now lived in his father's house as his guest and assistant. One day he was summoned to the Landrath, and received notice that within three days he was to leave the Duchy. No reason was alleged for this arbitrary expulsion; but his wife privately intimated to him that his wife on a paper of Danish tendencies made his further stay in his father's house inadmissible. The consequence was that the Freie Presse could not exist any longer as an independent paper, and was amalgamated with the Dannevirke, a journal published in the neighboring town of Haderslev. Scarcely had the new amalgamated paper appeared than its Sub Editor, Mr. Ben Neuten, who happened to be a Danish subject, was summoned in the like manner and ordered to leave the Duchy within a week. In a third Danish paper, the Dybol Post, published in the island of Als, the composers were born Danes. The police-master sent for them and ordered them to leave immediately, stating openly the same that if they would cease to work in the office of the paper advocating the Danish cause they were perfectly free to remain. Again, in consequence of the Danish language—the only one understood by the common people—having been proscribed, from the Divine services even in purely Danish parishes, many members of the community are prevented from learning the word of God, and this has led to a movement for getting Danish ministers to visit Schleswig and preach Danish in private conventicles. But the Prussian authorities objected to such private Church services, and expelled the Danish ministers as dangerous criminals. Some days ago a Danish vicar, who had come down from Jutland to visit his former parishioners, was seized by gendarmes and carried before the police-master of the district, who subjected him to a sharp interrogatory, and only with many cautions suffered him to continue his tour. While this system of arbitrary expulsion is being carried out against the Danish sub-

The Prohibition League, of this County, meets this evening, in the Y. M. C. A. rooms, to consider correspondence from their friends in Ontario, and to arrange for the circulation of petitions to Parliament. At the next session of the Dominion Parliament the friends of Prohibition will push the subject to a vote, at least the Ontario Prohibitionists are anxious to do so.
The Provincial Insurance Company of Canada, established in 1849, represents a capital of half a million dollars, with an annual income of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The newly appointed agent for this Province, Mr. Samuel W. Johnson, has fitted up neat and commodious offices in the building on the corner of Prince and Canterbury streets. Under his experienced and energetic management the Provincial will, no doubt, do a large and profitable business.
Mr. Bailey has no intention of putting an injunction on the laying of asphalt sidewalks by Mr. Magee, and expects to get an amicable settlement of his royalty claims. He holds a Canadian patent. Mr. Bailey says these are the first asphalt sidewalks in St. John, and he, the others being nothing but tar sidewalks.
An investigation into the Waterloo street fire was to have been held this afternoon, but was postponed until the forenoon, when the Chief will occupy the bench.

A Stray Letter.
A letter post-marked New Ireland Road, W. Office was received the other day by a young lady who feels sure that it must have been intended for another. As it is a sad, sweet strain, and should reach the one for whom it is intended, we publish a few lines so that the sender may know where his letter has gone:
If you are well, do not proffer a reason.
I prize you the more, the less you speak.
My love must not fail; pass on and be bolder.
I'll be bold, I'll be true, I'll be bold, I'll be true.
If I meet you, I'll tell you how I feel.
You changed; I did not; with forgotten smiles.
I truly, I freely, I wholly forgive you.
No clinging within my arms should I allow.
But you should not grieve me; you made me so.
I am what I am—it was made me so.
The writer, or any young lady who feels that the letter was intended for her, can have the stray document on payment of $2 for this advertisement.

Last.
Yesterday afternoon, in Carleton, a gold (band) bracelet, with black edge and chased on the outside. The finder will confer a favor by leaving it at The Tribune office. The article is a souvenir and prized dearly by the owner. It had a blue ribbon attached.

Cheap Travelling.
Messrs. Hall & Haughton, Cunard's agents, are now selling steamer passages from St. John to Liverpool, Queenstown, Glasgow, Londonderry or Belfast, by Cunard line of steamers from Boston, at the very low rate of $19. Cabin tickets with state rooms by this popular line can also be secured at their office at lowest rates.
Temperance Address.
The Rev. R. M. McLeod will deliver a temperance address at Hamm's Hall, Indiantown, on Sunday afternoon, at three o'clock. Mr. McLeod has been supplying the pulpit of the Portland Baptist Church for some time, and is about leaving for his home in the Western States. During his stay in Portland he has taken a deep interest in temperance societies, and Alexandra Temple of Honor—under whose auspices he appears—will present him with an address. Mr. McLeod has made many friends during his short stay in Portland, and his best wishes will follow him to his home.
The Daily Tribune and all the most popular Canadian, English and American newspapers and magazines can always be obtained at the book-store of Mr. W. K. Crawford, King street.
