CAPT. DUMAS OF FRANCE.

Nation Delights to Consider Him Typical of French Spirit.

Jean Dumas was 66 when the war broke out, and the French ment would not let him fight, the Cleveland Plain Dealer, in telling the story of his death. He besieged the recruiting offices till he became somewhat of a nuisance; and when he was convinced of the futility of further pleading he made a hasty pilgrimage into Belgium. In Belgium Dumas was received as a volunteer member of the Belgian army. Al-most immediately he was captured by the Germans.

And almost immediately he made his escape. France could not now reject him, and he fought in the French army at the battle of the Marne, where he received six

At the beginning of the Verdun bat-tle Dumas was again facing the Germans. Once more he was wounded, and the great battle proceeded with-out the aid of this determined veteran. But once more he recovered, and was in the front ranks when the battle of the Somme began last July. Near Clery he was wounded for the ninth time, and he died nine days later.

France delights to consider Dumas as typical of the French spirit and the French nation of to-day. France, too, is persistent; and France has displayed a power of recuperation as displayed a power of recuperation as amazing as that of Dumas. But because France is made up of many men like Dumas France doubtless 500,000 Lamp-posts Ready to Hang Them, Gerard Says.

Herbert Bayard Swope, recently returned from Germany, writes as fol-lows in the New York World:

How strong Germany believes herself to be in America can be seen in any of the political maps issued by the Pan-German League, on which a great blob of pink indicates the residence in America of the nine million of German birth or parentage. Those making up this number are claimed as indirect members of the league, who are, or ought to be, as the Pan-Germans see it, ready at all times to do Germany's bidding. It is the be lief of these Pan-Germans that through their far-flung membership some day German "Kultur" will dominate the world.
