

EXPERIENCES AS GERMAN PRISONER

seemed rather short of men, and few, if any, of the tall chimneys were active ; and practically every person whom one saw in the street was dressed in mourning. The officers and sentries with whom we came in contact would, naturally, not discuss the war, but if ever the matter was referred to, they always said, " It is only just begun."