Miscellaneous.

English Abroad.—John Bull is certainly a strange specimen of humanity, when contrasted with other nations. It is impossible for one moment to mistake him; he has an air and manner peculiar to himself; he enters the saloon of the hotel with a sturdy step and straightforward look, taking no notice of the salutation that foreigners usually make when a stranger enters. John says to himself, "I don't know the fellows, then, why should they bow to me? or, if they do so, that is no reason why I should bow to them." You can read his supreme contempt for foreigners and every thing foreign on his brow. He has an unconquerable antipathy to taking off his hat, either in saluting in the street, or entering a public room. Hence, from a neglect of this easily adopted custom of the continent, he gets the credit of being a mannerless cub. In England, a gentleman never thinks of taking off his hat, except it be to salute a lady; whereas, all over the continent, the custom prevails from the highest to the lowest rank. I recollect one day walking with the Baron de Wursburg, in the garden of Schenbrunn, and being in doubt as to the direction he ought to take, the Baron addressed himself for information to a private soldier who was standing sentry, at the same time taking off his hat. An English sentinel would have thought he was insulted by such a mark of respect; and yet it is in despotic countries that these observances are attended to, and, perhaps, is a wise policy. The lower orders are flattered by the tokens of respect from their superiors, and, being thus treated to the shadow, are content, perhaps, to forego the substance of power. How an English bar-maid would stare, if my lord this or that were to take off his hat and make her a profound salutation, in walking past her little realm! Yet so it is throughout the continent; and the Englishman who, from ignorance, or more likely from thinking it humbug, neglects this formality, is at once set down as entirely deficient in the breeding of a gentleman.—Comings's Notes of a Wanderer.
