The How vs. the What.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

I once heard a vaudeville artist sing a song in which she mentioned various things which other people did in a vulgar way but which she dignified by her manner of doing them 'like a lady.' One verse, for instance, explained how other people sometimes chewed gum in an offensive manner, 'but I chews fine like a lady.'

Of course it was amusing, but it had a germ of truth in it, too.

The subjective in life is just as important as the objective.

The way in which you do things and the way you feel about them matters as well as the things you do.

Dancing Can Be An Exercise or An Insult.

Take the new dances, for instance. Few things are more changed by what you put into them than dancing. People who object so violently to all kinds of dancing forget that, like music, dancing has infinite possibilities of interpretation. The much discussed new dances take their color from the dancers. I have seen the fox-trot, the onestep or the canter danced in a frank and simple way as a form of graceful exercise. And I have also seen them danced in a manner which made one wonder what the girls' mothers were about, to permit such things to go on.

Again a book or a play is not the same thing to any two people who read or see it.

I read recently two criticisms of a certain farce. One critic says it is very broad and rather coarse; the other that it is a thoroughly wholesome farce with nothing objectionable in it. Now both critics saw the play, but each must have put something into it out of his own mind and experience.

The Girl Whom Strange Men Spoke To.

To go a step further, it seems to me that the tendency of your mind not only colors what you do and what you think, but it influences your relation to events and people. I know a girl who is always being spoken to on the street by strange men. She has a modest enough bearing and is not a striking looking girl, but she is one who thinks a good deal about such things. I believe that this tendency of mind in some way attracts such experiences to her.

Of course outer conditions do react to change and form the inner mind, and so what one does certainly matters, but one should not forget that how one does it and how one feels about it also matter.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Question.—Do you think a man has a moral right to make his wife promise not to marry again, or vice versa?
 —L. C. B.

Answer.—No, I do not. Nor do I see how anyone could take satisfaction in having such a promise made to him. One would find happiness in having a wife who loved one so much that she would not want to marry again, but surely not in holding her an unwilling and resentful prisoner to the letter of compact whose spirit she no longer feels. Furthermore, I don't believe a woman from whom such a promise has been extracted (especially if the extraction was done on a deathbed) is under moral obligation to keep it if love comes knocking at the door of her heart.

The Question of Prohibition.

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir,—Some time ago you intimated your desire to hear the different opinions of your intelligent readers on their thoughts about the ultimate fate of the so-called "Liquor Question." Since then I have watched and waited most eagerly for some advice of logical admonitions or other theoretical material, either for or against absolute prohibition, material that would make the earnest thinker still more thoughtful and induce him to inquire into this most vital problem that some future day will constitute the most absorbing topic and furnish the most important question ever before issued in this country to be settled by the suffrage of the people. I shall not attempt to advance deductions from political economy. Time and conditions have changed since Adam Smith promulgated his "Wealth of Nations." Of such arguments we have had quite a lot during the last "Local Option Campaign." The comparison of immorality with intemperance is wholly absurd, and to control morality by enforced temperance is likewise unreasonable. Some of the most noted criminals in history have been radical abstainers, while some of our most gifted men of genius, word and deed have indulged in the flowing bowl. In this comparison there are perhaps no two individuals alike, and to condemn a whole nation and stigmatize them with inability to manage their own affairs is ridiculous. The effect of enforced prohibition can easily be proven by the backward intelligence of the "Turk." What figure does he cut after twelve centuries of strict adherence to the laws of Mohammed? The question at issue must only be viewed from the sociological standpoint. The old adage "a man's mind is his kingdom" holds only good when applied to the individual. A man's mind is character, his will, his judgment to discriminate between good and evil, it is his soul. If he chooses to abstain or not he is at all times sovereign lord of his present and future state of well-being. The minds of the majority on this liquor question can never induce the minority to form a perfect union, since coercion and harmony are incompatible. Should the individual be lacking of strength of will, power and firmness of character and self-reliance, but nevertheless cast his vote for prohibition, he is largely degrading his manhood and lowering himself to the level of the criminal, who through fear or other motives surrenders himself to justice. Nay, he is worse, for by his vote he helps to deprive his fellow-men of their liberty to exercise their own free will and hinders them to act in accordance to the dictates of their desires. Absolute prohibition can only be attained by the combined votes of fanatical sentimentalist and "kitten-heated men. All honor to the man, who through conviction, or desire to show example to his offspring or others under his care, or through the knowledge that he cannot control his baser passions. Yes, all honor to such a man if he abstains from all strong drink. But little honor to him who through his vote puts a halter around his own neck with no other result than part remorse after he has voted and part stentorian joy that he has helped dealing to his own level men of loftier ideals than he ever possessed.

Private McCormack in the Fight.

LETTER FROM FRANCE.

Dear Mother,—I am writing you these few lines to let you know that I am well, and hoping to find you the same. No doubt you have been thinking that I was dead, when you did not receive a letter from me for such a long spell. But you will have to excuse me, for we do not get much time for letter writing. I suppose you have read in the papers about the battle in which we were engaged against the Germans. I thought, dear mother, that hell was let loose for a few hours with shell fire, but we stuck to our posts; however a good many of our best men were killed. I do not know how I got out of it. No more at present.

From your loving son,
 Private JOHN J. MCCORMACK,
 No. 2287, 15 Platoon, 4 Co., P.P.C.I.I.
 British Expeditionary Force,
 France, May 19th, 1915.

The above is a son of Michael McCormack, of Spencer Street. He joined the British Expeditionary Force in Canada at the outbreak of the war.

Naval Reservist Died of Measles.

Mrs. Mary Ann Reader, of Bonaville, has received word from the Admiralty intimating that her son, John, who was one of the reservists to cross on the "Ordnua," had died at Penance on May 17th. Measles and complication was the cause of his death. He was 18 years of age and was one of the three boys who left school to fight for the Empire. The Admiralty had provided £2 for a headstone, said Reservist Norman Harris, in a letter recently, and that the Bonaville Reservists were adding to that amount. Deceased is survived by a sorrowing mother, two sisters and one brother to whom much sympathy is expressed.

NOTH OF THANKS.—Mrs. and Mr. E. H. Willis and family wish to thank the teachers and pupils of Bishop Spencer College, brethren of the Masonic Temple and numerous kind friends who sent notes of sympathy and flowers at the death of their little daughter Sidney.

BOARD OF TRADE EXAMINATION.—Mr. John Cook, of this city, was awarded an only mate's certificate of competency on Saturday, 5th inst.

REPORTED MISSING.—Private James Rowe, a Newfoundland with the Canadian Contingent, has recently been reported as missing. Private Rowe is a native of Cupids, and is a son of Mr. George Rowe and Mrs. Mary Rowe of that place. The young soldier's parents will have the sympathy of the community in their anxiety, and it is hoped that good news will soon be forthcoming.

DR. KITCHIN, P.P. PREACHES.—At St. Joseph's Church, yesterday morning, the Pastor, Rev. Dr. Kitchin, preached on the Gospel of the day, during which he made eloquent and touching reference to the cruel war now raging throughout Europe, and exhorted his congregation to pray fervently and frequently for our volunteers who had offered their services for their Empire and country. The discourse of the reverend gentleman was listened to with rapt attention as it was inspiring to all.

R. C. CATHEDRAL.—At the R. C. Cathedral yesterday, instead of the annual procession in the Church grounds, there was Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament from noon until after Vespers, when a procession took place through the Church. During the afternoon the Cathedral was thronged with devout worshippers, and at Vespers the congregation was a large one. Benediction was imparted by Rev. J. J. McDermott, the administrator of the Archdiocese.

OUR MUTUAL GIRL AT THE NICKEL, TO-DAY.

Nickel patrons are looking forward to to-day's programme as it includes another episode of "Our Mutual Girl." The heroic Margaret visits a fortune-teller who tells her strange things and she has a thrilling experience. "Ethel Has a Steady" is a comic in which is featured Fay Tincher the famous comedienne. "The Cripple" is a two-part social drama and one of the best ever given here. "He Loved the Ladies" is a sweet love story by the Selig players. Everyone will like this. Then there is a Keystone comedy. A very laughable one. Wednesday the third episode of the Million Dollar Mystery will be shown.
