"STRAFING" ROUMANIA.

The reference to Roumania by Mr. Dillon and the Minister of War in the House of Commons is interesting. It shows that Britain is aware of the fact that she has for the time being lost the distinction of attracting the lion's share (appropriately enough) of the famous "chaps" and that Roumania has been transferred to Roumania. The reason is the one given and is obvious enough. This upstart had the presumption, compelled by fate to judge between the combatants on purely military merits, to give her decision in favour of the Allies. She must be punished. Germany forthwith sets out to punish her, not merely massing a huge force on her Transylvanian border, which she was entitled to do, but evidencing her intent to spread disease among her people and indulging in other abominable practices, which she was not.

While concern will naturally be felt for our new and brave ally, her plight is indirectly an encouragement to us. Germany, led away once more by her feelings, is committing another fatal blunder. We see in her latest move another Verdun and another Trentino. A desperate and unadvisable detour of Bulgaria was not merely advisable but vital to her interests; the destruction of Roumania was not. Nor can it be argued that here offence is the best defence. Roumania is now part of Russia, and the time is past when the enemy can think of invading Russia. We are almost certain to see these operations share the fate of the Austrian avalanche through the Trentino passes. As long as it can be maintained at full force it will make progress, but it cannot be so maintained for long. The reason will shortly appear on the West front and in Macedonia, if not somewhere along the Russian line as well. In fact, we should not be surprised if this battering-ram attack on Roumania should prove to be the last, and nearly the greatest, German offensive. Clearly Hindenburg counts on the line in France holding until winter, and makes hay elsewhere while the sun shines. But that line may not hold until winter, and if it does not Germany will not merely be forced to abandon her strafing expedition but will have reason to regret that she ever undertook it.

We warmly endorse the suggestion of the Daily News that an effort be made to supply our soldiers with skin boots for the coming winter. So many good opinions have been expressed of these boots that there can be no doubt of their value. The best recommendation that we have heard is the experience of Sergeant Ernest Tessier, who is with a Canadian Regiment. His brother, Mr. Cyril Tessier, sent him a pair of these boots, made here by a local firm, and he was the envy of his fellow soldiers, Canadian and British. He wore them through the past two winters, in the conditions of which we have heard so much, and not once entered the inconvenience and danger of wet and cold feet. Captain Hoare and the late Lieut. Robin Dale are two other officers who testified to their comfort and serviceability. The matter is a most important one. The greatest enemy of the soldier in the winter trenches is beyond question water. To keep his feet dry and warm is necessary not only for his comfort but for his safety. There is here an opportunity both to serve our men and to encourage a fine local industry for the army authorities would be certain to take notice. If the boots have at present any defects—and we have not heard any—there is no doubt they could be remedied. We feel confident that our authorities will give the matter the attention it deserves.

A fresh indication of the valuable activities of the Khaki Guild will be seen in our advertisement of the White Elephant Auction Sale, to be held in the British Hall on the 28th instant. The object of all the Guild's endeavours is one which could not be more meritorious or more deserving of support: it is to provide a fund to be applied as may be found best to the aid and benefit of our returning disabled soldiers. In this instance the nature of the appeal should combine with its object to ensure a satisfying response, for there is no one in town that has not some article or another which could easily be dispensed with and at the same time find a purchaser. That it will fetch the highest possible price is obvious when we state that Mr. O'Driscoll will act as auctioneer. We are asked to state that the removal of bulky articles will be undertaken by the Guild if notice is given by the owners to the President, Mrs. C. W. H. Tessier, or to Messdames MacKeen and Syme. We may say, also, that the earlier contributions are received the easier the work will be for the organisers. "Qui cito dat bis dat."

Casualty List.

IST. NEWFOUNDLAND REGIMENT.
Received 10.30 a.m., Oct. 13th, 1916.
2068—Private John F. Sexton, Pleasant St., Admitted Wounded, October 10th; disordered action heart.
J. R. BENNETT,
Colonial Secretary.

Messrs. Lever Brothers

APPOINT RESIDENT MANAGER FOR NEWFOUNDLAND.

Mr. W. R. Cheshire, who arrived on the Florizel, has been appointed manager in Newfoundland, for Messrs. Lever Brothers, Limited, for the Vinolia and Blondeau companies, Messrs. A. & F. Pears, and other companies controlled by Messrs. Lever Brothers. Mr. Cheshire has been with Messrs. Lever Brothers for eleven years. His father occupies the position of Advertising Manager for Great Britain for this firm, and is also a director of the Vinolia Company and Messrs. Benjamin Brooke (Monkey Brand). Mr. W. R. Cheshire, who has represented Messrs. Lever Brothers in Lille, France, and also in Switzerland, was on the Swiss-German front on the outbreak of the war; he returned to England, offered his services to the army but was rejected, and was subsequently appointed to the position of manager of the firm's export advertising department. He takes up his new position in Newfoundland after being finally rejected by the Army Medical Board, and from this Island he will also control Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

Incandescent Gas Lighting.

Possibly, the feature of incandescent gas lighting most frequently noted by casual observers is the great ease with which tasks, ordinarily arduous under artificial light may be performed under the Welsbach gas mantle. The light has a peculiarly "soft" quality, which is not only pleasant to the eye but is readily recognized by those who have had experience with the gas mantle lamp.

In its general effect upon bodily health and comfort, the use of incandescent gas lighting is decidedly favorable. The currents of air set up by the burning gas mantle, which tend to expel the air vitiated by respiration and draw in fresh air to replace it. Harmful or dangerous dusts are instantly destroyed in the flame. The extent to which this effect takes place may be verified by placing a gas lamp close to a ceiling without any provision for dealing with the up-rushing air currents. The charred particles which collect immediately above the lamp are the remains of dust particles which before passing through the flames were laden with germs and microbes. Actual experiments have shown that the burning of gas lamps in rooms previously containing bacteria, resulted in absolute sterilization of the air.

Contrary to the popular notion, the temperature of rooms lighted by incandescent gas lamps is seldom markedly greater than under incandescent gas lighting, even under unfavorable conditions of ventilation, while in rooms provided with the ventilating facilities required by the demands of hygiene, the temperature in gas-lighted rooms is frequently lower.

Writing in the Gaulois of Paris on Great Britain's share in the war, General Zurlinden says: "Inspired by a lofty ideal they are doing wonders on the Somme front. Nothing has been so fine as the enthusiasm of their fighting celebration of 'France Day' on July 14 and the ardor with which they stormed three of our villages on that glorious day signing the Marcellaise. The same ardor is shown in every battle. Yesterday their heroism shone again finer and more victoriously than ever."

Great Britain's Share.

"Behind the supb and unflinching bravery of these fine troops there is their number, which is growing continually, in spite of the daily losses, and constitutes an absolute guarantee for the success of the Allied cause and of that of humanity against barbarism. In order to make this military effort and at the same time supply the armies with the necessary equipment, arms, guns, and the ammunition, Great Britain had to make extraordinary financial and industrial efforts. The devotion and enthusiasm of the British Empire will for ever be one of the wonders of history. France admires and will never forget Great Britain's marvellous effort."

The Zeppelins a Failure.

Springfield Republican: This war may quite possibly see the end of the Zeppelin. London's defences are stiffening, and the destruction in the suburbs of two more airships shows that the peril to the raiders is increasing. The immunity which they have for the most part enjoyed has been due not only to the scantiness of defensive apparatus, but to a lack of technical skill, and apparently the necessary technic is now being acquired. If England ten years ago had taken Count Zeppelin seriously, and set itself to finding an answer to the menace, it might hardly have been worth while to put millions into gas bags. The airship is vulnerable in the extreme when once the method of counter-attack has been worked out. If it flies low enough to drop its bombs with useful precision it is within range of fire from below, and if the objective is worth attacking it is likely to be worth defending.

"The Man Who Made Good."

(From the Manchester Guardian.)

Colonel Elkington, "the man who has made good," asked by a Daily Chronicle interviewer whether he had any complaint against the decision of the court-martial by which he was cashiered, said:

"Good Lord, no! The whole thing was my own fault. I got what I deserved, and I had no kick against anyone. It was just carry-on."

"And now you have got what you deserve," suggested the interviewer. "I hope so," replied the colonel. "I have got my name back again, I hope, and I am now something of a hero to redeem, and I thank God I have been fortunate enough to redeem it. Both the King and the War Office treated me in the handsomest way."

The French honors Colonel Elkington won were, at the request of General Joffre, pinned on his breast by General Morsan in the hospital of which the colonel was an inmate for ten months as a result of his severe wound.

"Directly after the court-martial," Colonel Elkington told the interviewer, "I said I must do something, and I did it. I went to the front with my service France. Yes, I did offer my services again to England, but it is military law that no man who has been cashiered can be employed again for the King while the sentence stands. So there was nothing for it but to go to the Legion—that home for the fallen man."

The Paris correspondent of the Daily Chronicle says that in Champagne Colonel Elkington, with a small party of men, held on for four days with reckless bravery and grim obstinacy to a point of vital importance on the French line. In the end a machine gun bullet shattered his left leg below the knee. He hopes in the near future to be able to go further to serve his King and country.
