CHAPTER XXX.

THE ENCAMPMENT OF THE CHEBOKEES—A

JOYOUS MEETING—THE STITLE—MENT IN DANCHE.

Philip and his companions watched these preparations with feverish impatience. They regarded them as so much time wasted, which might delay their arrival at the settlement until the latter had been destroyed and its inmates massacred, when the vengeanced which would be taken would avail nothing to secure for Philip the information he destred.

Steive tried to hint to Thundercloud the necessity of hasts, but the chief would not abute one jot or tittle of the sacred warlike rites. The safety of the settlers was subordinate in his eyes to the grandeur and glory of bursting on their foes with that suddenness, fury, and power of destruction which had procured for him his name, and this was an occasion for one of his most brilliant achievements which he would not impair by a proceeding which merely had for its object the protection of the settlement. At last, however, they were ready to set out, and plunging into the gloom of the defile they followed its devious windings in the utimost silence, hardly a twig crackling under their feet as they advanced. The path, which was really long, seemed to Philip interminable. It appeared as if many precious hours had been consumed in traversing it, though actually not more than two had passed. More than once he expressed his opinion to the trapper that they had missed the way, and were not approaching the settlement at all, but Steive discountenanced this idea.

"The Injins never miss the trail," he said. "Just you have patience, Mister Weston, and we'll come right slick upon the settlement. This darned valley is as full of winding as the body of a colled serpent, but we'll come to the head at last, sure and sartin."

"Ay, but perchance too late to save Jerry," returned the youth.

"Wall, that's as it may turn out. Fate may have fixed it so, and that 'ull be a pity, but Jerry is just the man to find ways and means o' holdin' out till the last plank is broken, and if the palisade its as strong as I guess, the Chickasaws will require time to get inside it."

Steive said this more to allay his companion's anxiety then from a conviction of the truth of his words, for secretly he had fears that they might not arrive till too late. The Chickasaws he knew had come with a force far greater than the settlers had strength or numbers to meet them with, and the wooden palisade which encircled the houses, however strong, could no would proclaim the termination of the defile.

At last he descried it, and that in a manner which filled him with dismay, for the first patch of sky which became visible was tinged with a lurid glare, which his practised vision natantly interpreted as the reflection of a fire. The Indians saw it likewise, and many expressive "ughs." were exchanged.

Indians saw it likewise, and many expressive "aghs" were exchanged.
All at once the defile ended, and they came into the open plain. There could be no dubiety now, for the whole sky in front was lighted up by the shifting glow of a strong and near conflagration.

Philip uttered an irrespressible cry and sprang madly forward. The Indians like-wise bounded on at full speed, and as they advanced the ruddy light penetrated in flashes between the trees, growing higher at every step, till they gained the edge of the clearing and the terrible scene was fully revealed.

The settlement was in flames, and the fearful sounds of contest came to their cars—the war whoop of the Indians and the shorts and cries of the defenders as they fought for all that was dear to them on earth.

A new paper, to be called The Union Standard, is about to be started in Thornbury by Mr. J. Farewell, late of Meaford.
The universal error as to the unheatthiness of pies, puddings and pastrie, says Hatl's Journal of Health, taking it for granted that they are well made and properly cooked, has arisen from the simple fact that we usually eat them after having made a full meal of other things. Of course, then, the stomach is oppressed by them, and if the process is repeated because that we usually eat the food, because it has been worked to death already. It would be quite as philosophical if a man has become very tired of plowing all day, and afterward by chopping If a man has become very tired of plowing all day, and afterward by chopping wood, has "worked himself out," to conclude that it was very unhealthy to chop.

Many suffer rather than take nauseou Many suffer rather than take nauseous medicines. All who suffer from coughs, colds, irritation of the bronchial tubes or tendency to consumption, will find in Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry a remedy as agreeable to the palate as effectual in removing disease. The balsam is a pleasant remedy; it is a safe remedy; it is a speedy remedy; it is a remedy that cures.

A DISTINGUISHED PHYSIOLOGIST has said that Neuralgia is the cry of the hungry nerves for their special food, which is the Phosphorous contained in the blood. This painful disease is usually followed by general prostration on account of the great wate of nerve tissue and insufficient supply of nerve force to the standard of the great water of nerve tissue and insufficient supply of a reversion of the standard of
