Sara, behind the blind, could see them, but they could not see her. Neal stood a moment at the door, and then looked down over the railings of the area.

"Are the ladies out?" he asked.

"Yes," came back for an answer in porcas's voice. The woman evidently did not know that Miss Sara had not accompanied her mistress.

"You can come in then," Sara distinctly heard Neal say to the lady—if lady she was, and he opened the door with his latch-key. They stood talking in the passage for some little time in an undertone, and then Neal took her into the back room. It opened to be dining-room with folding doors; but the doors were always kept closed; and indeed the back room was chiefly used as Neal's pantry. Sara, who at first had been doubt-ind whether it might not be a visitor to hereif, came to the conclusion that it was only visitor to Neal, and she resumed her read-chose the former—"person to do with Captain Davenal?"

She had spoken without reflection in her impulse; in her renewed fear, which she had deemed buried with the past. Neal for once in his life was confounded. He did not speak immediately; he was probably striving to recall what had been said, inconvenient for her to hear.

"I oll me at once, Nea!, I insist on your upcaking," she reiterated, attributing his hesitation to unwillingness to speak. "Indeed it is better that I should know it. What was she saying about my brother?"

That alarm of some nature had been aroused within her, that she was painfully anxious, and that also the slarm and anxiety were connected with Captain Davenal, Neal could not fail to read. But his speech was certainly less ready than usual, for he still kept silence.

peech was certainly less ready than usual, or he still kept silence, "I heard you tell her that Captain Davnal was married; that further news would le in by the next mail." pursued Sara, growing perturbed with every moment. "What vas it to her? Who is she? For what pursues did she come here? Neal! can't you mawer me?"—and her voice grew quite with its alarm and pain. "Miss Sara—if I hesitated to answer, it sthat I do not like to speak," he said at ength. "What is it that she says?". Have you seen her before to day?"

"She has been here ence or twice before. But for the understanding that you and my mistress were out. I should not have allowed her to come in this time. I am very sorry that it should have happened, miss."

"But what is it?" returned Sara, nearly wild with suspense. "What has she come for?"

'She has come to ask questions about ptain Davenal." But what about him? What is he to Neal coughed he took his handsome silk handkorchief—he always used very handsome ones—and wiped his mouth. Sara tembled. His manner was uppleasantly mysterious, and it seemed as if she were on the verge of hearing semething terrible.

"Does she know my brother?"
She says she does. Miss Sara I would have given a great deal to prevent this happening to-day. It will only worry you, and I dare say I could still have put her off and kept her quiet."

"Yes, miss, I know so much as that—Catherine Wentworth."
He retired, leaving Sara alone. Almost a rebellious thought was stealing over herwas she never to be at rest? Not much at rest just then certainly; for Mrs. Cray had driven to the door and was asking for her. Sara tied her bonnet on mechanically and went out. Mrs. Cray was easted in a fly. She would not alight then, she said; she had a great deal to do. Sara stepped in. Mrs. Cray was an imperious-looking woman, fair and pale, with a handsome face. Sara thought her over-dressed and very fidgety. They were not much acquainted at Hallingham.

"I have nothing to wear," she said to Sara. "I want a host of things. A bonnet first. Mrs. Mark Cray has given me the address of a superior dressmaker. She is a little selfish, is she not?"

"Who is?" cried Sara in answer to the sentence which came out rather abruptly after the rest.

sentence which came out rather abruphly after the rest.

"Mrs. Mark Cray. To confess to you the truth, I think she might have lent me the carriage this morning, instead of sending me out in a hired fly, and keeping the carriage for herself and the girls. It seems to be the way of the world now-a-days; the young before the old. She is Mark's wife, and I am only his mother."

At Death's Door.—Dyspepsia Conquered.—A Great Medical Triumph. Gentlemen,—My medical adviser and others told me I could not possibly live, when I commenced the use of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable, Discovery for Dyspepsia. My case was one of the worst of its kind. For three years I could not eat meat and my weight decreased from 219 to 119 pounds. All the food I took for thirteen months previous to taking the Vegetable Discovery consisted of milk. I am now entirely cured and have regained my usual weight, can eat anything with a keen relish and feel like a new man. I have sold over 30 dozen Vegetable Discovery since it cured me, as I am well-known, and people in this dozen Vegetable Discovery since it cured me, as I am well-known, and people in this section know how low I was, and thought I could not possibly be cured. They are eager to try this grand medicine. It certainly saved my life, as I never expected to recover when I first commenced using it. I am not exaggerating anything, but feel glad to be able to contribute this testimonial and trust it may be the means of convincing others of its merit as a certain cure for Dyspepsia. "It is what she says, Miss Sara. I told her it must be one of two things—either that she was deceiving me in saying it, or that she was herself deceived. But she insists upon it that she is shis true and lawful wife to that she was married to him nearly twelve months before he went abroad. She says my late master, Dr. Davenal, know of it."

Sara stared at Neai in a sort of heipless manner. Never for a moment did it occur to her to question the truth; her mind accepted it; a terrible calamity; worse, it seemed in this moment, than all that had gone before.

"She came here this morning in consequence of hearing of the Captain's marriage to Miss Reid. I acknowledged that news had come homa to that effect; it would have been quite useless, you see, Miss Sara, to deny what's known publically."

"Neal! Noal! you will not mention this?" came the feverish wish, the first uttered in her bewilderment. "You will guard if faithfully. We—I—some one must see what acn be done."

Schoolmates Married While on a Visit to the World's Fair.

Amsterdam, N. Y., July 31.—It has just been learned that Clarence Dean and Miss Grace Cora Wright, two young schoolmates of this city, were married on July 18 at Petosca, Mich. About June 1 Mrs. Dean and her son started for the World's Fair, and Miss Wright accompanied them on their way as far as Toledo, where she left them and joined her uncle at Mount Pleasant, Mich. Later Miss Dean visited the fair, where she again met young Dean. The couple went to Petosca and were married without the knowledge of any of their relatives. Miss Wright recently passed her 17th birthday and has attended the Clinton Liberal Institute the past year.
