

It is only distracting attention from the main and solemn issue, thus to beat around the bush. Every thoughtful person who has observed and studied the simplest facts and first principles in sanitary science, must be aware that a sufficient cause for all our deaths is to be found in the filth and pollutions which are allowed to remain in our midst, and which poison the air, more or less, of the whole city, but most of all of the low and swampy districts. A large proportion of the inhabitants pour their slops daily on the spongy soil around their dwellings; house drains or even paved water-courses are little known; the contents of privies surcharge the porous earth around; and our back-yards, unusually large as compared with English cities, and which ought therefore to add greatly to our healthiness, are only so many more square feet soaked through and through with fætid matter, forming (except during the merciful winter frost) an incessant poison factory, wafting disease and death into our dwellings. A large number of our houses are built on stumps driven into this putrid soil or even marsh; the cellars are always charged with miasms, which find their way into the upper rooms; and too often the houses, even if not back to back, have no doors or windows except on one side. Very lately an M.D. of this city, with above the average of reputation, planted a group of cottages of this description on one of the worst undrained swamps in our midst. As if these evils, which may not meet the gaze of strangers, were not enough, the corporation persist in laying most of the streets in soft limestone, which in a very few days is ground to fine dust, and soon becomes charged with effete animal matter, in which form it enters our dwellings and lungs; or else it is in a state of mud, which emits so nauseous a stench that cottagers, who have shut their back windows to keep out the smell of the yards, are obliged to shut the front also to keep out the smell of the street. It is impossible faithfully to execute the contracts for street-cleaning, while this stone, long since reported against by the City Surveyor, and theoretically abandoned by the Road Committee, continues in full use: and as to the vaunted scavenging by-law, the Council have refused the money to carry it out! It may be said with very few exceptions, that in the more crowded parts of the city inhabited by all except the wealthy, there is scarcely a square yard of ground which is not charged with effete matter, ready to generate poisonous gases under the influence of every summer sun.
