

WOMEN AND THE WAR

To help in this and in all other work in which women have a part, we need leaders among women. But they must be women of training and skill, able to do work of a world's standard. They must have accurate and scientific knowledge; and in their leadership, while they should be able to give the happy impulses of character and personality, they should add as well the definite power of the efficient worker, whose absence has been so far a drawback to the women of Canada. What women have to do in this day is not the work of a man, but the work of a woman, in co-operation with men at work.

No one knows what conditions will be in Canada after the war. But all Canadians must regard themselves as bound together in a working confederacy for national and international unity, for health, the employment of all able workers, education, and the care and national-
