

Phenomenal Performance of the Race Mare at Timonium Fair.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 5.—(Special.)—J. T. Harris Racing Belle surprised the wisecracks at Timonium today, when she won the $5000.00 purse in a straight race at 4 1/4 furlongs, beating Lasja and two lengths. In the fifth race, the daughter of Dan Patch won the $1000.00 purse to Royal Onyx, and many were of the opinion, had the distance been a little longer, she would have won. Despite the fact that she carried the top weight of 125 lbs., the daughter of Dan Patch was in danger, and held her field in front. Jockey Upton had the mount and rode a steady race. Lasja was second, and Gold Check third. The latter closed lots of the ground from a bad start.

Lee Evans won his second steepchase of the meeting, with Race Brook and J. C. Ewalt, the leaders throat, and, although the latter exceeded over the jumps, Race Brook was speediest on the flat.

Long was the winner of her performance on Thursday, capturing the $1000.00 purse for two-year-olds in fine style. Bulgar looked like a sure winner in the earlier stages, but stopped badly, and was unplaced.

TIRE CUTS

The agents most destructive to the life of a horse are mud, moisture, small stones and all kinds of foreign matter lodged in the incisions, deepen them and eventually work their way into the sole.

With Michelin cycle tire open cuts are practically unknown. The tread is tightly compressed to begin with, and the tread wears in such a manner that, when deflated, the sides are almost parallel, inflicting, therefore, no appreciable wear further, so that the tire does not close rather than open, thus effectually excluding dust, small stones and moisture. Moreover, the tread is made of a rubber that is not just the ordinary flat, thin strip of rubber; it is a substantial, well moulded, protective pad. Consequently, Michelin can pass safely over any obstacle that would puncture an ordinary tire. Hence the durable qualities of these tires.

Meggie, the postman is coming up garden path. Would you mind the door?"

"Yes, Martin," said Meggie, pausing in the kneading of the large batch of dough, and turned towards the tiny sitting-room. The door was ajar, and she peeked in response to the call.

Meggie glanced at the crumbed handwriting on the letter, and a gasp of surprise escaped her lips. "What is it from, Meggie? Is anything wrong?"

"No, but just into a flood of hot tears, and, fumbling the letter carefully upon the table.

"Jack is too good for me, I don't deserve to tell him so," she wept. "I don't want to hurt him. I don't want to hurt myself much until she said Jack's father."

Meggie fled upstairs to her own little room. She picked up the letter and read it slowly. "A look or two at the letter, which was couched in a tone of lofty condescension, mingled with a biting satire, conveyed the unpleasant message that she was a woman existing 'twixt Meggie and her father, and was viewed with disapproval, and she saw the girl to look elsewhere, and she went to bring Jack to her, a penniless beggary."

"A few moment Meggie, her eyes were filled with tears, and she said to her mother that her father was a fool, and she said nothing more."

"In a few minutes later found Meggie on her way to Flaminetland."

"A man emerged from behind a spur and came forward, and a sudden rush of suffused her cheeks. The man was her father at the same time, and came forward with a sudden rush of suffused her cheeks. The man was a tall, strongly-built man of about twenty-two, clad in rough fisherman's attire, and dark curly hair, and a pair of eyes that were as blue as the sea."

"What are you doing?"

The officer waved them aside.

One by one the crew of the Waterwitch were drawn to the shore.

"Thank the Lord, that's the lot saved!" said the officer.

Scarcely had he uttered the words when a slim girl's figure sprang towards him and seized him by the arm.

"All that's not saved!" she cried, in a voice that was almost a scream.

"There is Jack aboard, the captain's son. Quick, send the buoy back or he will be lost!"

The officer started in surprise.

"The captain should be the last to leave."

"Yes, but don't you see he was injured, and Jack has sent him first. Oh, be quick, or 'twill be too late!"

"The officer sprang to the rescue command, and the buoy once more went on the outward journey."

"I'm afraid it's all over mine. There is no response, the life-line vigorously and again waited, but without result. The buoy was drawn hither and, almost at the same moment, the officer perceptibly slackened."

"Good heavens, the boat is breaking up!"

"The officer and his men hurried away, and the buoy was left in the tree to tauten the rope, leaving Meggie standing alone by the swaying buoy."

"The reckless resolve flashed into her mind, and she glanced around sharply. The next moment she seized the rope, her eyes were fixed to the buoy, and was swiftly gliding down the steep incline towards the deafening inferno below."

Suddenly her attention was arrested by an indistinct object swaying to and fro in a tangle of rigging close beside her, and a gasp of horror escaped her lips.

She was seized by the figure of Jack Ryalis. Meggie suddenly leaped from the buoy and, seizing the officer by the arm, she said to him:

"The officer started in surprise."

"The captain should be the last to leave."

"Yes, but don't you see he was injured, and Jack has sent him first. Oh, be quick, or 'twill be too late!"

TOPE THE MEN AT THE TAXES

A WOMAN MUST BE A SWIMMER

Sport Has Added Greatly to its Popularity This Summer, Especially Among the Fair Sex on Local Beaches.

If you are a woman you must learn to swim.

Swimming is becoming a necessary adjunct to the achievements of a thoroughly inclined woman and this summer has seen the waters of the lake fairly teeming with women anxious to conquer fear of the water.

While the American beaches have been showing their silt bathing costumes Long Island has been trying to come to itself in the extravagance of its beautifully adorned beach models. Toronto has been establishing itself as a center of real women swimmers.

The local swimming season is now well under way and the swimming by the fair sex in local waters has never before.

Not long ago, when we were up records of their own local women swimmers have been making a brave effort to lower records held by the strong sex.

They have adopted the "crab" stroke until this year considered by swimmers to be man's own. They have even begun to discard the heavy swimsuit costumes so long considered staples to women swimmers. The stock market and those that have for years helped to hamper them for years thrown away and the costume generally has been adapted to the needs of progress in the ward of the modern formed costume worn in Toronto has been succeeded in making records that most men would be proud to have passed over their names.

Across the Bay Swims.

Swimmen from the city are busy in navigating the bay and the race held every week by Toronto Swimming Club was again a marked success that it is almost certain that the bay will be the bay swim' for women will be a permanent institution.

"Women are undoubtedly getting wise to the advantages of real, honest swimming," said Mr. H. A. Sutherland, president of the Toronto Swimming Club. "This year is the beginning of organized long distance races for women in local waters, but it has received more than enough support to insure its permanency."

"But there is a side to the swimming question that has wonderful influence with women. 'Swimming is the last figure developer that is known to modern science,' said a local physician to the Sunday World, 'swimming is to the figure as cold cream is to the complexion—it is a wonderful thing. It acts like magic. Even if it is only the vanity of the fair sex that will be appealed to in the plea of the necessity for almost certain that the next few years will see women competing on almost equal terms with men for the swimming honors of the city.'"

"The muscles of a swimmer are soft and flexible and unlike other forms of exercise. Continued swimming does no harm to the body. It is a sport which has always been a great detriment to women who do not look with favor upon large muscular limbs and powerful shoulders."

The bathing suit has been holding their back. Now that they have recovered this handicap all that women swimmers will say is 'look out!'"
