"No! No! Go on!"

In his opening remarks Bishop Fallon referred to a warning he had sounded some seven or eight years ago, while addressing the Canadian Club, when he said that the present war would come, and within the life of the oldest man present. His idea then was that the one great plan of the German was the wiping out of the British Empire. The bishop declared that what he had learned in the last five months had not changed his original conviction. The one great thing to overcome, in the German opinion, was Great Britain and her overseas of the dishop for dealing from the woods of France in the german opinion.

inal conviction. The one great thing to overcome, in the German opinion. Was Great Britain and her overseas dominions.

In response to a remark of President Campbell that the bishop would tell his audience what would become of the Hun after the war, the speaker said the German would be a "chastened, humble, law-abiding and Godfearing citizen of the world."

Didn't Want Pleasure Jaunt.

His lordship told of the invitation which reached him from the Canadian Government to visit France. His reply was that if it was a pleasure jaunt he did not want to go. If it was thought he would do good he would gladly go. He went. He said he did so with his eyes open, his ears unplugged. No one controlled his feet nor his tongue. He went where he wanted to and he got what information he wanted. His only regret was with a tribute to the British navy that he concluded this phase of his trip, remarking that "this silent pow-er has contributed more than any other single element to the winning of the war."

A Tribute to the Doctors.

As to Canada's services, the speaker opened with the Medical Corps. He said Canada's doctors have done wonderful things. Right under the fire of shells, he declared, "there is a perfection of detail that will give attention to the wounded equal to the best in any hospital I have ever seen." He referred to the striking absence of disease, and to the difficulties with which the corps have to contend. These had been mashade to Canada's services, the speaker opened with the Medical Corps. He said then cared into such intense sobriety is beyond my comprehension." He was almost drowned by the application of the striking absence of disease, and to the difficulties with which the corps have to contend. These had been mashade in Start at home. Don't the difficulties with which the corps have to contend. These had been mastered, however, and the work of the Medical Corps was one of Canada's triumphs and was so recognized by British and American leaders.

"Men in previous wars were disfigured and made hideous for life, men remained a pathetic sight for their release.

ured and made hideous for life, men remained a pathetic sight for their relatives to gaze upon, but thank God it is no longer so," declared the bisnop. "They build up broken-down bodies, and men when they leave the Canadian corps look almost as good as new."

His lordship in passing to the Dental Corps touched on the Ontario Hospital at Orpington. "If there is any pleasure in being ill it is at Orpington," he said. To the work of the Canadian dentists he paid fine praise, stating that no effort was left undone that might restore and build up those who have suffered in defence of the Canadian cause. His lordship's introduction to his next pilgrimage was amusing. He posed as a son of democracy, armed with his inherent right to criticize, breaking down the barriers and invading the Canadian pay and records office. He also mentioned the fact that he had sometime in the past heard the word "graft." He tioned the fact that he had sometime in the past heard the word "graft." He even went so far as to admit to his hearers that he knew how to spell it.

Emulated by Americans.

It might be said that his lordship here interrupted himself to give a few impressions of what others thought of Canada's effort. He quoted Americans striving to achieve the high pinnacle which Canada had attained. He quoted British officers' tributes to the domin-

"I was awakened from that dream, however, when the Canadian newspapers reached me. Then I wanted to return home. Everything was going to the bow-wows." Bishop Fallon said he explained that this was due to the fact hat the Canadian people were, without exception, in this fight, giving their re-sources and their wealth. But he de-clared: "I cannot help thinking that a little less criticism and carping would

The fire department soon had the flames under control.

Lumber piles near the building caught fire, also the window sills of the Canada Overall Company, the damage to these being very slight. An estimate on the loss could not be obtained, owing to lack of knowledge as to what the building contained.

How the fire started is a mystery. The night watchman had just completed his rounds, and had started on his way home, when the fire seemed to shoot out from the roof, as if an explosion had taken place. Five minutes after the outbreak the whole building was blazing, and being a frame structure, burnt very rapidly. As far as can be learned tin cansand the cooperage were the only things of value destroyed. The property is covered by insurance, and the loss is considered slight.

Beware the Flat Tire In Business

Sometimes business enterprises suffer from a flat tire. The best of tires gets a puncture, and the air cozes out, and if one

It is then the time to send for the repair man, and to fill the tire with the compressed air of advertising. The tire may be likened to the business structure. But the tire isn't capable of bearing a load when it is deflated. The weight must be held up by high compression.

Advertising is the air in the tires of business.

Don't let your business tires get soft. Keep them firm, yet resilient, by means of the strong force of advertising. Punctures do not matter so much. They may be mended. But you must keep your tires full of air that is not vitiated, and with the valves made leak-proof, the road ahead is smooth and full of promise.
