BRITISH FILM AT IMPERIAL TONIGHT

Charles Read's famous sea yarn "Foul Play" is at last made into pictures and wonderfully realistic high-class pictures they are too. The British Mastercraft producers have given to the world the most splendid picturization imaginable of the world-wide read fiction. It is not a blood-thirsty narrative as the title would suggest but a consistent sensible story of the ship sailing at sea in the days of the penal colony in Australia. The costumes and manners of the players are mid-Victorian, showing college life at Oxford, the homes of the wealthy shipowners, scenes of the land and sea and amid the ruins of the old world. The scenes are shipboard during the wreck. The scenes again change to a lonely mid-Pacific island where the hero and heroine live until rescued. It is a lovely story—adventurous, refined and in no wise strained or impossible. It is another of the fine genuine British pictures. Tonight and Saturday are the show days at the Imperial.

TRAGEDY IN A BROOKLYN STREET

Girl Shoots Another and Kills Herself—Jealousy Belief of Miss Hanan's Companion.

New York, Sept. 23.—Miss Mildred Hanan, said by the police to be a daughter of the late Alfred P. Hanan, wealthy shoe manufacturer, was shot three times early today as she was emerging from an apartment house in Brooklyn with John S. Borland, an importer. Mrs. Lawes, who fired the shots, then ended her own life by firing a bullet into her brain. Miss Hanan, in a hospital, refused to discuss the shooting.

According to the police, Borland said Mrs. Lawes had stepped out of the shadows as he and Miss Hanan emerged from the apartment where they had been visiting a friend, and fired the shots. He attributed the shooting, police said, to jealousy, admitting that he had quarrelled with Mrs. Lawes recently over Miss Hanan.

Miss Hanan's condition was reported to be critical, but not necessarily fatal. One of the bullets took effect in the left breast, near the heart, one in the left side and one in the right arm.

Borland was unable to explain to the police how Mrs. Lawes learned that he and Miss Hanan were visiting in Brooklyn. He said he had gone to Brooklyn with Miss Hanan to help her seek a new apartment. The apartment hunting trip, he said, ended with a visit to Miss Dorothy Gottschalk, a friend of her family.

They left the apartment about one twenty five in the morning, he said, and encountered Mrs. Lawes as they stepped to the street. Without speaking, Mrs. Lawes drew a pistol and fired. She then stood for a moment regarding them, Borland said, and then uttered a scream, pressed the muzzle of the pistol against her head and fired.

"TOO MUCH HIGH LIFE" PATHETIC LETTER IS LEFT.

New York, Sept. 23.—Mrs. Lawes left the following letter for her mother, Mrs. M. E. Dittmar, of San Francisco—

"Mother Darling—

"You never can understand what I have been through here. Don't try to. I am too tired and ill to try to overcome the great obstacles I have placed in my own way.

"Too much high life. The pace is too fast and the liquor has driven me crazy.

"Forgive and forget, and remember, pray for my soul.

"Love to all and think of me as I always was to you, a good, sweet, daughter."

Lovingly, "GRACE."

'I' G' A SARTORIAL FIRST.

(London Graphic)

Quite the interesting thing of the week is the discovery, of course, by ourselves of Lloyd George as the best-dressed prime minister. It may surprise him, or it may confuse him, although that is not likely, and it will certainly amuse him. The terrible Tailor and Cutter has made fun of the garments of other English Prime Ministers. It can only have praise for the silk hat the morning coat, the waistcoat and the creased trousers in which "I. G." went to the Sutherland wedding. He could not have been more immaculate if it had been his own wedding, and, indeed, when he was married he probably made a poor appearance for most bridegrooms do that.

"Dizz" was a "dandy" out that has nothing to do with being well-tailored, looking it, and feeling it, because clothes have atmosphere. Mr. Gladstone thought himself dressed when he put on his familiar frock-coat, or jumped into evening dress, which he boasted he could do in five minutes. The Marquis of Salisbury's clothes hung from his shoulders as if they had been put out to air. His kinsman, Mr. Arthur Balfour, probably never knows just what suit he is wearing, "lounge" or "morning." Lord Rosebery had a Pyromic touch when he was young, but developed a weakness for old and comfortable shoes. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman sometimes looked like a country gentleman, at other times a farmer, and Mr. Asquith, for all Margot's supervision, still shows a love for buggy trousers. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain knew how to dress, but, then, he never was Premier.

I bow in reverent gratitude, As through its wide-flung doors I pass. Here is no man-made structure, rude With hideous dreams in stone and glass! On rested feet its aisles I tread, Fresh vigor in its service find. Here is no city of the dead! Here dwells, in love, eternal mind!

Not from frail reeds nor brassy throats Sound here the anthem of His praise! Thrilled with life's joy, the wondrous notes Rise from each dweller of His ways!

I breathe the perfumes, clean and sweet, That, here, untouched by priestlings, rise! And know their incense goes to greet The Lord of wood and hill and skies.

Here is no place for evil thought, For selfish prayer, for pomp of goods; This is the Temple God hath wrought, The Grand Cathedral of His Woods!
