UNION CLOTHING CO. STABAT MATER, THE HYMN OF ANGUISH.

The Liturgy of the Catholic Church has nothing grander or more sad than the "Stabat Mater," whose accents seem like the Passion Story, and whose every note is a heart sigh. It is the greatest of all hymns, and one of the greatest of all poems, unequalled in its sad notes of piercing anguish, and the price, the grandeur of this wonderful composition are surpassed only by its marvelous translation into English. The English translation is unworthy of the original, except the faithful literalness with which the Latin has been turned into English. The poem depicts in a sad manner every description of grief. The story of the making of the Stabat Mater is full of romance and is as weird as the tragedy it depicts.

The author, Prior Jacopone, was a lay brother of the Order of St. Francis. Around his youth is clustered the romance of a brilliant temperamental life dissipated in life's great aim, seeking rest and solace, hidden, unknown and unloved in a Franciscan monastery. The few who had known his brilliant promising youth, had gone the way of all flesh, and only one in the monastery knew of the latent fire that was still smouldering in the soul of the godly brother, now bent with age and in the winter of his life. Who was but for long years in his quiet life pondered and meditated on his poem, and at last with dying ink of life he gave it forth to the world. De that as it is the Catholic Church, ever since, during the season.

THE STORY OF ITS MAKING.
A following account of its creation from the French in the Franciscan Review:

It was the Holy Week of the year 1294, and the scene was in the city of Dante. The night was dark and dreary; the moon shone and whistled, shrilly through the bare trees; not a star was visible, and the only relief from the gloom came from the frequent lightning flashes which rent the clouds. The cell of the Franciscan monastery, at Alanzoni, was calling the religious to prayer, with its slow and solemn tones; the monotonous ding-dong floated over the silent plain, whilst far away, from the scattered villages, came the echo of the evening Ave Maria.

Inside of the monastery could be heard the rustle of habits and the sound of sandals on the pavement as the religious went to their cells. The wide silent passages, which seemed peopled with mysterious shadows. That evening the younger Friars shivered involuntarily with a vague terror. The fact was, that, during the preceding nights, long-drawn plaintive moans had disturbed the monks' slumbers. Whence could these mysterious sobbing sounds come? One said that the sorrowful voice, or rather the sorrowful chanting, came from the cemetery; another thought it issued from the cloister; a third was certain that he had heard it in the most distant of the chapels; a fourth declared it came from the choir, and even maintained that the organ, awakened by a strange phantom, had accompanied the song with notes whose sadness was heart-rending. When the Friars were all assembled, the Father Guardian, raising his voice, said: "Let us humbly ask God, my brethren, to console us, to make known the cause of the noise that has disturbed the peace and silence of this house of prayer and penance; we must ask Our Lady! She knows whose feast we keep today, to intercede."

This they did, and their prayer was very fervent. When it was finished, an old Friar, drawing near the Father Guardian, said: "I have reason to believe, Father, that the mysterious voice which has disturbed us at night proceeds, not from beyond the gray, but from one of the community. If you command him under obedience to speak will clear up the mystery." A superior hesitated a few moments but he soon made up his mind, and said: "Light the candles around the organ, and let the organist play. We may know if all are false." This had been done the Guardian said: "In the name of God, obey!" I command the Friar who, for lights past, has disturbed the peace of the cloister by mysterious actions, to make himself known. If the reason of his moaning is to prove interesting to us, in the name of charity I desire him to tell it. Immediately one of the Lay Brothers, with age, came forward, peeling back his cowl from his head, and with lowered eyes he said: "Father, I was I who did it."

Every one turned and looked at the old brother, whose face was this and worn with fasting. A confused murmur ran round the community, whilst the only distinguishable words were: "Brother Jacopone, of Todi, Dante's friend!" "The client of the Seven Dolores!"

"Brother Jacopone did not say a word in answer; he knelt down, kissed the ground, pulled his cowl over his head again, and went to the organ. The fire of genius shown in his eyes, a halo of celestial light seemed to surround his head."

Suddenly the organ emitted a mournful sound, as though the angel of sorrowful harmony had touched it. Brother Jacopone's face was lit up by inspiration, and, in notes that were like the lament of a seraph he sang:

Stabat mater dolorosa,
Juxta crucem lacrymosa,
Dum pendebat Filius.
Cuius animam gementem,
Contristatam et dolentem,
Pertransivit gladius.
Ad crucem, her station keeping,
Stood the mournful Mother, weeping,
Close to Jesus to the last.
Through her heart His sorrow sharing,
All His bitter anguish bearing,
Now at length the sword has passed.

The admiration of the monks soon changed to a sort of terror, whilst the echoes from the vaulted roof sounded as though the angels took up the wailing notes of the inspired singer. He, for his part, sobbed like a poor exile trying to stifle his emotion; but in a few moments he raised his eyes to a picture of the Passion, and gazing at the Mother of Sorrows, he continued:

Oh, how sad and sore distressed
Was the Mother, highly blest,
Of the sole-begotten One!
Christ above in torment hangs;
She beneath beholds the pangs
Of her dying glorious Son.
Then fixing his eyes on the Religious,
Who were watching him with reverent astonishment, he went on:

Is there one who would not weep,
When'd in misery so deep,
Christ's dear Mother to behold?
Can the human heart refrain?
From partaking in her pain,
In that Mother's pain untold?

The Friars sobbed now; they were all weeping in the dim shadows. The aged monk, raising his eyes again to the Mother of the Sorrows, went on in steeper tones:

Brusled, derided, cursed, defiled,
She beheld her tender child,
All with bloody scourges rent;
For the sins of His own nation,
She saw Him hang in desolation,
Till His spirit forth He sent.

The very pictures and statues that decked the altar seemed to be stirred with emotion! In the dimness of the church to that dismal hour of night rolled the pealing soul sobbing notes of the client of the mother of the Crucified One:

O thou Mother! fount of love!
Touch my spirit from above;
Make my heart with thine accord;
Make me feel as thou hast felt;
Make my soul to glow and melt
With the love of Christ, my Lord.

The candles died out, the hearts of the hearers were stirred and they fell on their knees. Strange sounds mingled with the sobbing and with the chant, the last notes of which thrilled the souls of the Friars, who listened enraptured to the poet's words to Mary:

Holy Mother! pierce me through;
In my heart, O Mother, make
Of my Saviour crucified.
Let me share with thee His pain,
Who for me in torment died.

On, on the singer went moving every heart to its very depth:

Virgin of all virgins best!
Listen to my fond request.
Let me share thy grief divine;
Let me, to my latest breath,
In my body bear the death,
Of that dying Son of thine.

And now the ring of Brother Jacopone's voice melodious, with a strain of sadness in it, filled the whole church, now strong and vibrating, now sinking low, with the always perceptible sadness. Now and then it sounded like the voice of a little child, who cries when he sees his mother weeping, thinking he has grieved her:

Wounded with His every wound,
Steep my soul till it hath swooned
In His very blood away.

Then there came a moment solemn beyond description: from the organ pealed forth a very storm of sound, rattling, crashing; pillars seemed to shake and the arches rang with the sound; was roof about to fall? Brother Jacopone sang:

Be to me, O Virgin high,
Lest in flames, I burn and die
In His awful Judgment day.

In the joyful repeated the Friars and the echo answered all around, in the jubilee!

The singer, thrilling with emotion, and as if in agonized consciousness of the presence of the Supreme Judge, sang humbly:

Christ, when thou shalt call me hence,
Be Thy Mother my defence,
Be Thy cross my victory.

Suddenly the singer turned pale, as though death had laid his hand upon him; his hands could no longer move over the keys, and scarcely a note of the organ accompanied his falling voice as he sang faintly:

While my body here decays,
May my soul thy goodness praise,
Safe in Paradise with Thee!

Paradise! That was the last word, Brother Jacopone fell from his seat; the monks gathered around him; the author of Stabat Mater was dead—after bequeathing to the church that hymn of sorrows, which will never be forgotten while the world lasts.

EXPLOSION OF BOMB AN ACT OF VENGEANCE

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 1.—The explosion of a bomb in the Pera quarter of this city last Friday, in which two men were killed and four wounded, appears to have been an act of personal vengeance against an Armenian, Andon Kouchohian, formerly a friend and colleague of Pashan Pasha, ex-chief of the secret police of the palace, who recently was exiled to Mudania at the request of the German government and with whom he recently quarrelled. The man who threw the bomb escaped.

A SMOOTH VILLAIN.
"Before we were married," she complained, "you always engaged a cab when you took me anywhere. Now you think the street car is good enough for me."

"No, my darling. I don't think the street car is good enough for you. It's because I'm so proud of you. In a cab you would be seen by nobody, while I can show you off to so many people by taking you in a street car."

"You dear! Forgive me if I gave you pain in saying what I did."

THE STORY OF A CHARM.
A titled English lady has a story of a woman who had a little Japanese charm given her. Every time she wore it some mischance happened, and she generally fell ill. Her son at last took the jewel to the keeper of the Japanese curios in the Paris museum and requested to be informed what the charm represented. "This," said the expert at once, "is the emblem of sickness." The woman never wore it again.
