Marriage Ceremony of General Tom Thumb and Miss Lavina Warren

At twelve o'clock to day (Tuesday), or rather, shortly after that hour, the great sensation of the day culminated, by the little Miss Warren throwing the name of her blooming youth away and agreeing to to be known for all her future life as Mrs. Charles S. Stratton or Lady Tom Thumb.

Long before the hour for the bridal of the innocent little creatures had arrived, the police were on hand to do full justice to the outside programme of the ceasion. They were instructed to have the horses heads pointing down Broadway, or their tails shaking toward Union Square, just as the worthy knights of the club and leather caps might consider the most appropriate for

Opposite Grace Church, above and below that temple of fashionable religious services, gathered a crowd of ladies and children, all anxious to see the happy pair alight from the equipage that would wheel them to their place of marriage, and to look upon the smiling face and rich attire of the brilliant all in the line. But all this while the bright sun of this ding of the gallant General and his bride. by Then, all at once, a great flutter ran through the vast throng of anxious expectants. The carriage was coming. Then the carriage came, the little pair stepped forth, and about ninety-seven ninety-ninths of the spectators didn't see them. The two pine-

The windows of the adjoining houses were filled with big-eyed boys and girls, and disappointed young ladies, and fidgety dowagers, all of whom (in an optical sense) strained every nerve to see the charming groom and bride.

Brown, as usual on such occasions, was in his highest element. He was now here. now there-and we were about to say everywhere at once. His manner plainly show ed the weight of the responsibility which was resting upon his shoulders, and he looked, if anything, more elegantly fastidious than ever before,

The church was crowded at an early hour by the fair expectants of the marriage ceremony. All the fashionable world thronged to do honor to the smallest couple who have ever taken upon themselves the ows of matrimony. Among the ladies who were generally in calling costume, was seen here and there one en grande tenue, whose rich toilette added greatly to the brilliant scene.

Among the many notable persons present was seen the tall and soldierly figure of Gen. Burnside, whose entrance was a signal for a general rising, and many whispered exclamations of admiration for the hero of many

Shortly after the clock struck twelve the wedding party entered, preceded by the family and intimate friends. Then came the four little people. First the Commodore and Miss Minnie, then the "happy couple." A platform had been erected to about the height of the chancel railing, which en abled all to see the ceremony. The service, always im- for collection. pressive, was rendered doubly so by the musical responses of the little ones, whose clear tones echoed distinctly throughout the vast

The ceremony being quickly over, the vast assemblage p ssed down Broadway to the Metropolitan Hotel, where, in the parlors, the reception took place at one o'clock In one of the suite of apartments were exhibited all those beautiful presents which have already been described in the Commercial Advertiser. Among those who were present at the reception were representa-tives of many of the first families of this AN ACT FOR THE BETTER PROTECTION city, and indeed of the country.

Statesmen and soldiers, divines and edi tors, merchants and authors, paid their respects to the happy couple, who received all with a smile, and replied to the compliments showered upon them in the most fitting

Altogether the ceremony and the recep tion was conducted with the best of pro priety and good taste. The arrangements were most ample and most fastidious, to which not even the daintiest could take exception .- N. Y. Com. Advertiser.
