Mrs. Theo. Newell, Argyle Sound, N.S., expresses her opinion of this wonderful blood remedy in the following letter:

"It is with the greatest gratitude that I can testify to the wonderful curative powers of Burdock Blood Bit-For years my husband suffered terribly with Erysipelas and Salt Rheum. He was so bad at times that he could no sleep on account of the itching and burn-He had been under the care of six different doctors, but they failed to do him any good. I had read different times of wonderful cures being made by Burdock Blood Bitters, so advised him to give it a trial. He did so, and after taking five bottles was cured without a doubt would strongly advise any person troubled with blood disorders to give B.B.B. a fair trial for I am sure it will cure them

Bedroom floors may be kept cool and frest by wiping them daily with fresh water. Microbes, moths or other in-sects are thus destroyed. Salt and camphor in cold water is an excellent disinfectant in bedrooms.

In rooms that lack sunlight it is astonishing to see how a strong, bright yellow color of just the right shade, introduced by means of a cushion, or chair, or hangings, will give brightness and life that are almost sunny in effect. Parsnip fritters may be made by scraping and boiling three or more parsnips until very tender; then, hav-ing mashed and seasoned them with salt, pepper and butter, make a pint of batter, add the parsnips, and fry a ta-blespoonful at a time in boiling lard.

When the glass globes of the chandelier have becomed smoked and grimy soak them in hot water, to which a little sal soda has been added. Them put some ammonia in hot water and scrub the inside of the globes briskly with a stiff brush, whereupon ringe thoroughly and wipe.

Oné-half cupful of butter, one cupful of molasses, one cupful of sugar, one cupful of sour or buttermilk, one teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in boiling water, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, two eggs, about five cupfuls of sifted flour, or enough for a moderately thick batter. Cream the butter, sugar, mo-lasses and spice; set the mixture on the range until lukewarm. Add the milk, then the beaten eggs, the soda, and last the flour. Beat hard for five minutes. Bake in small tins or a single cake, as perferred. It is excellent either hot or cold.

Cheese custards served with thin bread and butter sandwiches are often given as a separate course before des-sert. Into a cupful of warm (not hot) milk stir one teaspoonful of cornstarch until dissolved, two tablespoonfuls of grated cheese, half a saltspoon full of white pepper, a few grains of cayenne, a quarter of a teaspoonful of mustard, and salt to taste. Heat carefully in a double boiler until the cheese is dissolved. Add four eggs, yolks and whites beaten separately until light and brown. The mixture should be baked separately, for each person, in paper cases or pattypans, and eaten as soon as done. All cheese dishes should be served very hot.

New Form of Goose Culture. A North Dakota farmer has dis-covered a new way of increasing his flock of geese without going through the usual formality of buying or hatch-ing them, and yet he does not steal them. As the story goes, there is a great sand bar near the home of the farmer. This piece of land projects into the Mississippi river, but in such an exposed condition that a hunter cannot reach it without being seen. For many resting place for flocks of wild geese on their long flights to the far north. Recently the farmer in question saturated several pecks of corn with alcohol and distributed the "doctored" grain over the surface of the bar. The first flock of geese that alighted eagerly gobbled up the corn and soon became decidedly intoxicated. Some of them rolled over and went to sleep; others squawked absurdly and staggared about the bar. and still others tried to fly, but only plunged around in the air awhile and again alighted on the strip of the sand. The farmer, who had been in hiding, watching the effect of the scheme rushed to the sand bar and captured nearly the entire flock. He now has plenty of geese.-Exchange.

Fertile Eggs. When a hen steals her nest and is allowed to sit, the result is usually a large hatch. When hens have been fed carefully and have produced eggs for a long time, it is folly to expect good regults from setting such eggs. Natura causes the female to become "broody" when her nest is full of eggs; therefore, the first twelve or twenty eggs laid are strongly fertile, and will produce healthy chicks. The result is less satisfactory as the number of eggs increases. I have experienced this, and do not breed from my layers.

The best results are obtained by mating two or three-year-old females with yearling birds, keeping such fowls back until you wish to mate. Breeding fowls can be allowed to run at large or mated with one male; partial confinement with more than one male will lead to trouble and lack of fertility.

Do not blame your incubator or the place where you set your hens; the trouble can be further off.

Eggs that do not test strongly fertile at the end of seven days, will not give a big hatch or healthy chicks.

Thirty years of exeperience has taught me that the key to the situation lies in the capiton of this short letter.—D. E. Howatt, in Country Gen-

In the stomach and digestive and nutritive tracts are performed processes which are exactly akin to the churning of butter. Is it not apparent, then, that if this stomach churn is "sour" it sours all which is put into it? The evil of a foul stomach is not the bad tasts in the mouth and the foul breath taste in the mouth and the foul breath caused by it, but the corruption of the pure current of the blood and the dissemination of disease throughout the body. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery makes the sour stomach sweet. It does for the stomach what sweet. It does for the stomach what the washing and sun bath do for the churn—absolutely removes every tainting or corrupting element. The Boy was glad of this, for his faith in himself was about gone. He gathered up his brushes, throwing a few curses at the weather as he did so in a bravado sort of fashion. He was determined not to be a fool this time and seek unsatisfactory sympathy from people who could not understand. Instead, he would go down to the "Vesuvio" and allow its liquid flame to consume his mood. "Better be drunk than foolish," he said to the Girl as he started for the door. "I'm tired of this breathless pursuit of the Ideal. After all, if I did overtake her, I don't suppose she'd be worth

"Envied me? Don't laugh at a fellow because you've happened to find the way to success. Suppose you do manage to naint good canvases and win plaudits. Ten million people have had the same little reward for the same mighty struggle. Already the wear and worry is showing on you. In ten years youth will be gone from you and all you'll have for it will be the memory of heart's blood painted into canvas for trivial imention,' and tragic realization of your limitations. The wise man is he who refuses to do what he is able to do; our ability always seems so much greater ability always seems so much greater to us until we put it to the test. Never give yourself a chance. That's the only way to escape heart-break."

The Girl was fragile in the gray light

The Girl was fragile in the gray light. She stood at the window looking into the twilight that fell in hopelessness among the crowding walls of unsightly buildings. The Boy took a step toward the door. Then the Girl turned.
"I wish you would not talk like that." she said. "It hurts. Have I ever said expected to do great things? You know I haven't. I was mean to-day and half envied you for your gift. But I don't want to envy anybody. I try-not to think of future or fame, for it is thinking of self-glory that brings pain and disappointment. I try to do my work as best I can because it is my nd disappointment. I try to do my rork as best I can because it is my work as best I can because it is my work and because I must do it. I know it is delightful to win success. We can't help feeling that our effort has won approval. But I don't work for success. I put my heart into my pictures because I have to, and if by so success. I put my heart into my pic-tures because I have to, and if by so doing I can soften, if only for an in-stant, some other heart; bring a look of wistfulness into a careless eye; waken a longing in a dreamless soul, I have the greatest of rewards. Work for work's sake demands no sacrifice. On the contrary, it leads our feet into the ways where perfect happiness may be

"I know how weak I am and how discouraged I grow even yet. But discouragement never lingers long. All I need do is remind myself that I am not an isolated toiler wearing out my own destiny in unsympathetic solitude, but one of many who are working to carry to completion the wonderful plan of the great Designer of things beautiful.

"There are no failures. Your discouragement helps me to catch the shadows my portion of the picture needs to-day; my rebellion shows you the glorious light of patience and sympathy your brush must depict."

"It's easy to talk hopefully when or patience and sympathy your brush must depict."

"It's easy to talk hopefully when you're already in the sunlight of success," replied the Boy as he grasped the door-knob. I'm done with brushes."

The Girl laid her hand lightly on the Boy's shoulder. "What great work you are going to do," she said. "Some of the wonderful touches in the picture have been reserved for you. You are not 'tired of the pursuit of the Ideal.' You are only impatient that your hand has not yet the wonderful skill your soul demands of it. Be patient; there's not only Time but Eternity for our work."

They stepped into the corridor and paused in silence. From a room opposite some divine melody drifted to them. The Boy was glad of the darkness, for his eyes were wet. He grasped the Girl's hand.

"I thank you," he said. "I guess I was only impatient."—Leavenworth MacNab.
