

VICES are held nightly, and the interest steadily increases; some of the most hardened men in the village have been converted, and the work among the young men and women is wonderful. There is still much to be done. May the Lord break down every barrier that hinders His work. May we not expect great things as the result of this blessed revival?

The doctor and family are nicely settled in the hospital and have three patients in the house.

We are beginning our Christmas preparations and practising, but being out every night interferes very much with this, as well as our regular work, for when the girls are out so late at night they cannot get up so early, and I have thought it best to attend the services regularly. We have a prayer-meeting for the little ones before their bedtime. They are all so earnest. May this be the beginning of brighter days for the Home.

PORT SIMPSON, Nov. 16th, 1892.

We have moved into our new hospital and have made things as comfortable as possible. Our furnishings are meagre, but we are making the best possible use of what we have. We have a very good supply of bedding, but pillows are very much needed, also sheets, pillow-cases, towels, night-dresses, and night-shirts. On the 14th inst. we received two barrels of beautiful bedding from the St. Mary's Auxiliary. We are now in the midst of a great revival, I think the like of it has not been felt in this place for years. On Sabbath evening twelve came out on the Lord's side, and every night there are conversions. The natives are interesting themselves in the work of saving souls. A number of them visit the homes and hospitals for the purpose of holding prayer-meetings with the inmates. On Saturday the doctor discharged a patient who had just recovered from a serious operation; before leaving the ward, the patient held a prayer-meeting with those he was leaving, and exhorted them to put their trust in Jesus. The prospect for the work is very encouraging. As the people are coming home for the winter, Dr. Bolton's work is increasing; it is quite a
