Ontario teachers walk the picket line

TORONTO (CUP)—More than 120,000 full-time and 600,000 part-time students in Ontario do not have to go to school as teachers at Ontario's 22 community colleges walk the picket line.

The 7,600 college teachers, librarians and counsellors set up pickets Oct. 17 after last-minute mediation failed to solve the dispute.

The Ontario Public Service Employees Union, which represents the teachers, rejected an offer made by the Ontario Council of Regents Oct. 15. The Council of Regents, which governs the colleges, offered a one-year contract with a five per cent compensation package.

But Ron Kelly, chair of the union bargaining committee, said the union rejected the offer when a majority of the membership gave the union permission Oct. 2 to go on strike.

In a statement released last week, the union accused the Council of "provoking" a strike by presenting a three-week-old offer.

At issue in the dispute is the teachers' workload. The union wants teachers to have more time to prepare lessons and mark papers. The Council has refused to budge from its contract proposal.

Although a few colleges plan to continue some part-time and night courses under the supervision of the administration and part-time faculty, students are already protesting.

At Sheridan College, 60 college students milled about Queen's Park, chanting and singing. "We're not going to take it any more," they shouted.

At Humber College, about 400 students demonstrated in front of the college's administrative offices. Though vowing to remain neutral in the strike, the Humber student council said it organized the protest to heighten students' awareness of the issues involved in the dispute.

"[Ontario universities and colleges minister Bette] Stephenson said we won't suffer, but we're suffering already," said Darrin Caron, student council president at Humber College.

The Ontario Federation of Students has also said it will not pick sides in the dispute. At a recent conference, the federation decided to declare itself publicly neutral but does support the striking teachers in principle.

The teachers have been without a contract since Aug. 31. □
