FEROCIOUS DOLPHINS.

Marine Monsters That Are Known as Whale Killers.

There really is such a sea monster as the whale killer. It is one of the largest and most ferocious of all the dolphin family. It also is known as the grampus. It is characterized as a genus by its large size and the conical and depressed head, devoid of a beak. The back fin is of great length, especially in the males, and the flippers are large and broadly ovate.

The teeth are comparatively few in number, varying from ten to thirteen on each side of the jaw, and are much larger than in any dolphins yet noticed, being often an inch or more in diameter and having an oval section. The coloration is striking, the upper parts and fins being black, while the lower jaw, chest and under parts are whitish.

The white area of the under parts does not, however, extend to the flukes, but ends posteriorly in a trident, of which the lateral and shorter prongs extend obliquely upward on the flanks. There is a large white streak above and behind the eye, and frequently at least a purple crescentic area extends across the back behind the fin. The killer attains a length of at least twenty feet.—St. Louis Times.

LOBSTER AND BUTTERFLY.

Widely Apart in Appearance, They Are Close Relatives.

You would hardly think it to look at them, yet the lobster is a relative of the butterfly. The kinship is not merely that of two members of the animal kingdom. The lobster and the butterfly are actually in one and the same great group of the kingdom, like the clam and the snail or the whale and the giraffe, whose spheres of activity are so widely separated.

It is simply, as Darwin pointed out in the case of all other creatures a great many years ago, that the lobster and its friends, the crab, the prawn and the shrimp, chose one method of life, while the butterfly and its set chose another.

So the first group developed characteristics suited to the conditions in which it lived, including as one of the most important, as its members do not move rapidly, a coat of armor to protect them from their innumerable enemies, while the butterflies and the great host of winged insects have shed every bit of superfluous weight, trusting to swiftness to carry them out of danger and to protective coloring to conceal them when flight is unavailing.—London Family Herald.

When Dead Men Ate.

In the medical press is a story of a man who believed that he was dead, and who for that reason refused to take nourishment. "How can the dead eat and drink?" he asked when food was pressed upon him. It was obvious that unless something were done to bring him to his senses, the delusion must soon become actuality—he would die of starvation. The strange case was tried. Half a dozen attendants, draped in ghostly white, crept silently in single file into the room adjoining his and with the door open sat down where he could see them at a hearty meal. "Here, who are these people?" inquired the patient. "Dead men," answered the doctor. "What?" said the other. "Do dead men eat?" "To be sure they do, as you see for yourself," was the answer. "If you said the corpse, 'if that is I'll join them, for I'm starving.' The spell was broken, and he sat down and ate like forty famished men.

A Matter of Gender.

The bell of a Scottish church was giving out a very strong tone, and a committee was appointed to inquire as to what was wrong and to report on the best means of putting it right. After an examination the members were divided in their opinion, and the clerk officer, who was in attendance with the keys, was asked to give his opinion. "Fine, a bell what's wrong?" the bell," he remarked. "It's a she-bell," meaning that it was of the feminine gender. Pressed to explain, he added, "Its tongue's over long—it's needin' to be clipped." And this turned out to be really the fault. The tongue, which had become loosened to the extent of an inch or so and was overlapping the curve at the rim and therefore not striking truly.

Dogs of Belgium.

Belgian dogs that are banded to carts often work themselves to death. They may enjoy their work for a time when they hurl themselves into the collar to drag the milk cart (and often the lazy milkman as well as his cans), but they do not enjoy the ensuing paralysis. The sight of a dog dying of starvation in the street because his paralysis jerked him away from food every time he attempted to take it is not conducive to happy memories of Belgium.

He Didn't Put It Off.

"Gracious!" exclaimed Mr. Staylate. "It's nearly midnight. I should be going pretty soon; I suppose." "Yes," replied Miss Patience Gonne. "You know the old saying, 'Never put off till tomorrow what you can do to-day.'"—Philadelphia Press.

Much Worse.

"Oh dear," pouted the pretty girl in irritation, as the trolley car came to a standstill. "What is worse than waiting on a switch?"

"Trying to pass on the same rail, madam," responded a gentleman beside her.—Judge.

To be weak is miserable, doing or suffering.—Milton.

WILY KING EDWARD I.

Foiled the Rebellious Welsh With the Prince of Wales.

After a lifelong struggle with the Welsh, Edward I. of England sought to ascertain the cause of their constant rebellious and was informed that they would never be content until they had a prince of their own.

The wily old monarch asked them if a prince born in Wales who could not speak a word of English would be satisfactory, and they received the offer with great enthusiasm, presuming that the king meant one of their own flesh and blood.

His queen, about to give birth to a child, was hurried to the famous Caernarvon castle, where 600 years ago Edward I., the first prince of Wales, was born. Thereupon King Edward, carrying his newly born babe on the ramparts of the castle, announced to the multitude: "Here is your prince, born in your own country, who knows no word of English and who, I promise you, shall be reared by a Welsh foster-mother and shall learn your language as you speak it."

In all the six centuries intervening the eldest son of the king of England has been invested and known as the Prince of Wales. In the year 1911 the present Prince of Wales and the future king of England was invested on the same spot as his predecessor 600 years ago.—T. Owen Charles in National Magazine.

HEAT AND THE BODY.

We Are Able to Drink Liquids That Would Scald Our Hands.

The human body can stand far greater heat if it be dry than if it be wet, and, strangely enough, it can stand far better liquids inside than out.

For example, the average tea drinker sips tea at a temperature of about 140 degrees F.—sometimes as high as 145 degrees. But he cannot bear his hands in water at 120 degrees or his feet in water higher than 112 degrees. Few people can stand a bath in water at 105 degrees.

In parts of central Australia men live in an average temperature of 115 degrees F. In the shade and 140 degrees in the sun, while 151 degrees has been registered. In the Persian gulf the thermometers on ships vary between 122 degrees and 140. A recent explorer in the Himalayas reports that he found at 9 a. m. in December and at 4 p. m. 10,000 feet altitude a temperature of 131 degrees F. Drs. Bleyden and Chantrey, two English scientists, desiring to ascertain how high a temperature the human body could stand, shut themselves in an oven, of which the heat was gradually raised and they were able to bear it until the thermometer registered 212 degrees F., the boiling point of water.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Ruskin as a Patient.

Matlock, so dear to John Ruskin, brought him within sight of death in 1871. It was a wretched, wet summer; he went out in a miserable morning to paint, took a chill, and aggravated the internal inflammation that followed to a dangerous degree by refusing to take the doctor's medicine. The sequel is delightful. Irritated at the doctor's remonstrances, he demanded what was the worst thing he could take. Beef, they told him, and beef he insisted upon having at once. It was late at night and Matlock was scoured for some time before beef could be found. Then, says Mrs. Arthur Severn, he "enjoyed his late supper thoroughly, and though we all waited anxiously till the morning for the result, it had done him no harm. And when he was told pepper was better for him he dredged it freely over his food in defiance."

The Least He Might Do.

Little Faith was possessed of a most friendly disposition, but had not yet reached the age where she could understand the silence that may wrap itself about a wordless intimacy. In fact, she demanded speech, frequent and loving.

One night her brother was studying most assiduously his arithmetic lesson, and after calling to him several times without receiving an answer, she appealed to her father.

"George is busy," said father. "I know," replied Faith, "but he might at least have said, 'Shut up.'"—Woman's Home Companion.

Curious Mixture.

A want advertisement from a serious French journal reads: "A young person having received an excellent education, including writing, geography, history, mathematics, dancing, music and art, would like to enter a respectable family to do washing and ironing."—Everybody's.

Only One of a Kind.

"Why do you think he is such a remarkable man?" "He's the only one I ever knew who had nerve enough to make the response in the marriage service loud enough so that any one could hear him."—Chicago Post.

Enlightened.

The Student—Always get these two terms mixed. What is the difference between matrimony and paternity? The Professor—Matrimony is engineered by the mother and the necessary paternity is supplied by the father.—Kansas City Star.

The Bachelor's View.

"What is the most aggravating thing in married life?" asked Dorothy. "Sometimes," he said, "the bachelor friend, 'It's the husband, and sometimes it's the wife.'"

Four Little Tots And Mother Here

They Were Turned Back at Quebec by Stupid Immigration Officer.

Mrs. Lavell and four children arrived in Brantford at midnight from England.

It was she and her youngsters who were turned back without reason, by an over officious government man at Quebec when they had reached the shores to rejoin the husband and father.

The Brantford branch of the Imperial House Reunion at once took the matter up with Messrs Cockshutt, M.P. and Fisher, M.P., and the department with the result that their return to Canada was at once ordered, with all expenses to be borne by the government.

Mr. Harris, secretary of the organization in question, happened to be on the same train, and on arrival here he phoned for a horse and rig to have the tired-out travellers taken to the home awaiting them at 248 Brant Avenue.

Wedding Bells

AMOS—WRIGHT

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Jude's rectory on Saturday afternoon, when Miss Susanna Agatha Wright became the bride of Mr. James Robert Amos. The young people were unmarried, though a number of their friends and relatives accompanied the happy couple when the nuptial knot was tied. The Rev. H. A. Wright officiated, Mr. and Mrs. Amos will reside in Brantford and for their new home amid a shower of confetti and good wishes.
