its armies at the gateway of the Boers' early dawn, they sat on that natural country Is it "to defend the women" and children of Johannesburg," as Dr. san to pop off their enemies at their Jamieson asserted after his unsucc-cessful raid, or for philanthropic reasons to bring civilization to a halfcivilized race I hardly think it is for either of these reasons.

There lies upon the great plateau, three thousand feet above the sea, in the country called the Transvaal, the Eldorado of the world. Its riches in mineral and fa m land are not half known, except to a few speculators, who have nothing to lose and all to gain in creating a war. The smaller gold fields beyond Jonannesburg at Barberton are seldom mentioned, yet they yield over $350,000 monthly. The gold-bearing quartz reef occurs in slate formation.

Lying in a semi-tropical belt, where thermometer ranges from eightythree degrees in Summer to fifty-seven in Winter, the climate is perfect. The water, coming directly from the mountains, as it does, is delicious, and sickness among the children is very rare. It is the garden of South Africa, where pineapples grow all the year round, and strawberries are to be had from December, to August. Apples and figs grow side by side. while sugar cane. rice and tobacco ferms pay richly.

With the Johannesburg mines yielding over two million dollars a month. and the Kimberley diamond mines in Griqua Land West producing over a million and a half dollars a month the reason of the present cause of restlessness in the minds of the Uitlander in Souah Africa is obvious.

With Oom Paul Kruger in command of one side of the gateway, and the brave English army on the other side. why should there not be carnage The stakes are high and well worth playing for, says the Uitlander. But Oom Paul says: "Show me why I should not guard my country and people and its wealth from the invading foreigner, who never intends to live here only long enough to secure his booty and carry it away with him to some fore-

The English have coveted the country inch by inch ever since the Commissary Sluysker of the Dutch East India Company, just a century ago, deeded the Castle and City of Cape Town to His Majesty, the King of Great Britain: From the time the English landed, about 1637, the Dutch farmer born in Africa and called "Boer" because he was an Afrikander born, and so disting from the foreigner, has been compelled to move on fur her up the country. So he trepped on and up and over the great Dra-chensberg Pass, 7,000 feet above the sea, into Natal, where the Zulu race in all its Spartan strength lived. The Boer was not "wily" until after he met the Zulu. There, in that veritable paradise, lived the great 1200 of warriors whose chief. Dingeswayo. was considered the Napoleon of Zuluwho exterminated the native tribes, numbering fundreds of thousands of souls, leaving only a rem-nant to live in caves and holes in the ground. Dingeswayo was the ancestor of King Cetewayo, who led his army against the English forces in the last Zulu war.

The Boers finally met-the Zulus and were friendly in their relations, trust-ing to the latter to treat them fairly and arrange to meet them in council and deed them a portion of land which they and their families were to settle upon.

The hour appointed arrived, and, leaving their wives and children in their wagons on the surrounding hills. they entered the enclosure pointed out to them, leaving their guns behind. to show their implicit confidence in their dealings with the natives. Without an instant's warning at a given moment the Zulu chief gave the sign, and with but one or two exceptions every Boer was massacred, and a few days later the wives and children, who were waiting for their husbands and fathers, were also murd-

News travelled slowly in those days, but when finally it reached the ears of the Boers living on the border of the country they vowed vengence and they got it. In a moment when the Zulus least expected it a horde of Boers burst upon them like maddened wolves and annihilated them without mercy, and in a wallet of a dead Zuiu secured the deed of conveyance. So the Boers fought for the country and made themselves a power to be feared by the surviing native tribes. But they had no sooner settled on their farms than an English ship came sailing into the harbor at Durban, Natal, and, hoisting the Union Jack, proclaimed it British territory. The Boers could scarcely believe it, but when they realized their weakness to try to cope with the British forces, they took all their belongings and turned their faces northward and again trepped through the great Drachensberg Pass, over those awfui mountains, through the Vaal River to the Transvaal country, and there began life anew. We all know how they were again pursued by the British, until, biding their time, they turned and faced their English foe, and in every battle but one routed him. He still knows how to ride and how to shoct and how to make the natural formation of the country, with its dry river beds and precipitous sugar-loaf or square-topped hills, serve his purpose to meet his fees. No Boer to-day who was engaged at Majuba Hill will say that the defeat of the English forces on that day was anything but a wonderful and surprising dissensation of some unseen force greater than men. Majuba Hill is a rocky, treeless hill, rising from a steep slope to a "sugar-loaf" summit. General Colley the English commander, with 60. nen of the Fifty-eight, Sixteenth and Ninetysecond and the Natal Brigade, arrived at the bill late in the evening of February 26, 1881, tired and footsore from their weary march, and after looking down the slope on the Boer' equip-ment of about 2,000 men, they laid down to rest.

When the Boers saw them they were about to fly, but General Smit, with a few picked men, volunteered to climb to the summit, which they did, before Why is the English nation massing the British soldiers were awake in the parapet which crowns the hill and be> for six hours, but to their consternation they discovered that the ammuniperation picked up stones and threw them at the pi fless, firing Boers. The latter saw their predicament and charged down on them, yelling and nring with the deadly aim of skilled hunters and showing no mercy unt!; eighty-five killed and 131 wounded and about sixty prisoners were left with the Boers on the hillside. General Colley was killed. It was rumored that he committed suicine when he saw the biunder that he had made, but Dame Rumor in South Africa told us that General Colley was shot by one of his own men in a fury of anger at being caught in such a trap and without ammunition.

While in Durban, Natal, # met a few surviving members of the gaiant Fif y-eighth, which suffered the greatest loss. The shee music of the pand was torn and blood-stained, while the brass instruments were dented out of shape by the flying bullets The chin would quiver and a shudder would seize them and sometimes the eye would moister when they alluded to Majuba Hilk.

The Boers are a great people to relax when there is nothing to do, but when danger threatens their homes and country they prowl around and sight their enemy with a sagacity equal to the man-eating lion, and then, when least expected, they pounce on their prey and bring it to earth with one fell swoop, as you might Bayl They have had to learn to be

The great religious undertone of the Boer nature is constantly being alluded to and also how much he trusts and confides in the American. We found the Boers particularly gracious. President Brandt, who for twenty-five years was President of the Orange Free State, was the greatest Roman of them all. He was educated in England, and was a polished old patriarch and the least aggressive of any of the leaders. He believed in coercion, arbitration and in uniting the different States into one great commonwealth, similar to our United States. That was his dream, and he was the kind of man that gave the best he had for his

Oom Paul Kruger is a totally different type of man, raised up especially for the deliverance (?) of this generation. He was born in Colesberg, Cape Colony, more than seventy years ago, and when more than ten years of age went forth with his father and family and crossed the Orange River in the Great Trek of 1836-37. In his youth he was noted for his courage and for being a crack shot and also for his good judgment in all things. His running powers were famous, for men said that he could keep up for a while with a good horse

It is said that he has probably not had more than six weeks' schooling in his life, and possibly never heard any one preach or teach, especially upon of the great issues of life, until after he was thirty-four years of age. About that time an American missionary, living in Natal, the Rev. Mr. Lindley, applied to the Government for leave to go up the country into the Transvaal and preach the Gospel to the Boers. It is said that Oom Paul Kruger went one night to hear Mr. Lindley preach, probably the first preaching he had ever heard. After services Oom Paul was nowhere to be found, and did not return for three When he did he was a changed man, and from that day his life took on a new tone and the Bible was the only book he read. The Hollander is not particularly liked by Oom Paul and his people, any more than is the Englishman. He is no more like the Afrikander Dutchman than his English cousin. The Boer speaks a patois and not Holland Dutch and in the event of war the Hollander would hardly stick to the Boer. The Afrikander is the offspring of the Dutch colorist and French Huguenot exile, and after 200 years' struggle for independence the Hollander of to-day is quite another type of man. Those rich gold mines are there; so is the Boer, and back of him that factor which the world will yet reckon with the African savage. This war in Africa will rouse the natives to a frenzy, and there will be a terrible reckoning for somebody Either the Boer or the Briton must leave, or through the horror that will sweep over the land the rousing of the native element, unite through sheer terror and hold the black man at bay. The native of South Africa is no more to be compared with our American negro than a civilized man is to be compared to a wild one. Our negro lives with al! the comforts and even luxuries of civilization around him, with his books and his colleges; the other still lives in his blanket and hunts through the provincial forests and cultivates his primitive farm. The Basutos are the great warriors living on the borders of the Orange Free State. They are intelligent and know that their land is rich in mineral wealth, but, as they have always been friendly with the Dutch, they are more liable to turn and join with their forces. The native of Africa is the only black race that the white man's vices and his whiskey do not seem to be able to obliterate from the face of the earth. The natives of New Zealand, Australia and America have veen nearly effaced, but not so with the African. He is temperate and takes. pride in raising large fields of grain and works at the white man's indus-tries.—By Louise Vescelius-Sheldon,
