Caholic Union.—Little Bell is the name of a very instructive and successful society drama which will be presented in the city hall on July 21st, by members of the Guelph Oatholic Union. The piece is a new and good one. It is is entirely devoid of anything like blood and thunder, every sentence is refined and pure. It is far superior to any drama heretofore presented by this Society. The cast, which has three ladies in it, is an exceptionally strong one. Every character is good. The sale of tickets commenced on Thursday, and they are going fast, and there is every reason to believe that, as usual, the hall will be filled.

PRESENTATION.—On Friday evening last, the Masonic fraternity of Chatham presented the Rev. J. S. The revd, gentleman preached his farewell sermon last Sunday, and also presched the annual sermon to the Masonic fraternity. The church on this coorsion was handsomely decorated with flowers, arranged in masonic emblems. The altar rails and stands were also festcorned with his are and foliage, and presented a fine appearance.

The thirteenth annual closing exercises of the Ontario Agricultural College took place on Thursday afternoon. The large dining hall was specially fitted up for the purpose and was well filled by visitors both from town and country. Many representative farmers with their wives and daughters were present, thus showing the interest they take in the work of the College. The Hon. A. M. Ross, Commissioner of Agriculture, presided. On the platform were Mr. Mills, President of the College, Mr. Brown, Professor of Agriculture, and their inembers of the teaching staff, the Hon. James Young, ex. Commissioner of Agriculture; Hon. President Mills in opening the proceeding expressed the pleasure he and the other professors felt in seeing so many present. In speaking of the students he was glad to say that there was a larger proportion of farmers' sons this year in a larger number had remained to complete ithe full session, and that a larger proportion of the first year's students had come back' to complete the full two years' course. He also spoke highly of the character, conduct, and ability of the students, who on the whole were the best that had ever attended the College.

Mr. Mills then introduced in 1.20 Bleightholm, one of the students, who gave an address on "Farmers and Farming—their present status and possible future in Ontario." The essay was well thought out and expressed in terse and vigorous

The Ac Board of practical men had giv he would not tell them anything in the line of practical or scientific agriculture, for they were well acquainted with that already. He would ask them to love their profession for its own sake. If they entered into their life work with enthusiasm and put their training to practical use, their system of agriculture would be better than their neighbors. They were responsible, to a large extent, for the success of the College, for the farmer would judge that institution by the work ther students performed. It had been said that farmers lacked ambition, it was theirs to show pride in their work and to strive that farmers lacked ambition, it was unersto show pride in their work and to strive carnestly to better themselves and those effound them in every way. He had been trying to get a competent successor to Mr. Robertsun, but so far without success; he did not want a second class man. The new barn, buildings were also proving satisfactory. All these advances showed that the department of Agriculture were doing their utmost to further the interests of their special charge. By an act of least session, any farmer desiring to drain his farm could get the necessary money from the Government at four per cent instead of five as heretofore. Mr. Ross closed an excellent address by expressing his satisfaction with the prospects of the Gollage.

Before breaking up Mr. Mills extended a hearty invitation to the viators to examine the college buildings, the barns, grounds, &c., of which not a few availed themselves of the opportunity. These exercises brought to a close the mois successful session yet held, since the college was established.

Closing Exercises of the Session.

The thirteenth annual closing exercises of the Ontario Agricultural College took place on Thursday afternoon. The large dinking hall was specially fitted up for the purposa and was well filled by visitors both from town and country. Many some time past. The Agricultural College, the annual agricultural reports, and the College experiments had had their share in bringing about this increased prominence, but he thought the, Farmers' Institutes were the main cause. The farmers were finding agriculture not so productive as formerly, they had to put forth every effort to meet competition, and they were seeking how to keep up with their changed requirements. Farmer's Institutes were first established two years ago, and to day whirthy these cognity.

seeking how to keep up with their changed requirements. Farmer's Institutes were first established two years ago, and to day thirty three county. Anstitutes were in existence organized and subsidized to a smalf extent by the Ontario Government. Though the most important class in the country, the farmers could never exercise their legitimate influence until they were organized. Manufacturers had their societies, and the, agriculturists were now opening their eyes to the fact that they too must combine to exert any influence whatever on legislation. Quite recently a Provincial Farmers' Institute had been formed, and the question of Commercial Union or unrestricted reciprocity had been laid before county institutes and the farmers generally. This was a most important question, and they should discuss it from their stricted reciprocity had been laid before county institutes and the farmers generally. This was a most important question, and they should discuss it from their stricted reciprocity had been laid before county institutes and the farmers generally. This was a most important question, and they should discuss it from their strictpoint, as other bodies in the community viewed it in the light of their several fifterests. They should not overlook the claims of others but it was theirs to see that any legislative action taken should be for the beneft of the mejority. He did not intend to touch on the subject further. He was pleased to see that the Dominion Government had established Experimental Farms and stations, Ontario's progressiveness had thus teld against her, as she was supporting a College at her own expense, which no other Province was doing, but she could afford to be generous. In looking over Prot. Brown's summary of the experimental work done as he College during the last thirteen years he found that two hundred distinct sets of experiments had been extracted at a new field, but there was gain in repraining an experiment sagain and again, as this was needed to establish a principle. loard of practical men had given the agricultural community more condence in the management. As a result of the adoption of the scheme of county students, 27 farmers' spas, with two yea. 3 at least practical experience, had taken advantage of this provision the first year out of 47 counties. These students were giving better statisfaction to the faculty than any they had liad. They intended to make a third year course for those who wished to perfect themselves in their agricultural studies, and they would grant a degree. They had established a fairy department at the Collegs. The dairy exports of Canada were the most valuable of her agricultural exports. Of cheese they exported to the value of over eight million of butter nearly one million and a half, and of cattle seven millions. Their main work was to place their butter alongside of their cheese in the first place in the English market. They wished to convince
