

BOVRIL'S DOUBLE HONORS.

Messrs. Bovril, Limited, have been awarded the Grand Prix at the Ghent Exhibition, and also a Diploma for Excellence at the Congo Belge Exhibition, Elizabethville. This double distinction, which heads a long list of previous awards, is certainly a high tribute to the excellence of the world-famed beef-beverage.

Rio Janeiro.

Rio Janeiro is one of the world's greatest surprises to those who believe that America ends at Key West, and that south of that point the Indians are still fighting off the descendants of Pizarro and other eminent hold-up men.

Rio Janeiro is the capital of Brazil. Those who have not consulted an Atlas since 1867 and who have known Brazil merely from its coffee are inclined to wonder what need the country has for a capital. The same kind of a human scallap who wonders whether the inhabitants of Kansas dress in skins or calico, and who declines to explore his country west of Canada's Corners, Connecticut, is likely to believe that Rio Janeiro is composed of grass tufts festooned with 25-foot anacondas, and that the well-known moistness of the unhealthy in the rain season.

These beliefs would create a good deal of amusement in Rio Janeiro, which is a city of about a million up-to-date people situated just below the thorax of Brazil on the Atlantic ocean, and so far from the Amazon river that many of its inhabitants have never heard of it. Rio Janeiro has the finest harbor south of New York, and all steamers of any social standing whatever call there while passing. This harbor is profusely decorated with mountains on three sides, and the famous Sugar Loaf peak, which is a natural decoration placed there in mired by all travelers.

The early Pleocene era, is greatly ad-

Rio Janeiro's real name is "San Sebastião do Rio de Janeiro," but the full name is only used by the leisure class. The city was founded in 1567 while North America was still a howling and shaggy wilderness, and has been a South American capital since 1680. The age of the side streets in the older portions can be accurately calculated by the amount of dirt on them, but the main streets are broad and handsome, and Rio Janeiro has made all North American seaports look cheap by surrounding its harbor with a broad boulevard garnished with trees. When Rio Janeiro needs a new business street it bores one through the middle of the town in a manner which would fill a North American city with awe, and it spends as much money improving its looks as New York does improving the bank deposits of its millionaires.

Rio Janeiro is a two-story town. The masses live in the lower story two or three feet above the ocean level and die of malaria, with great fluency and ease, while the classes live in beautiful suburbs back in the hills reached by streets cars which climb like Thomas cats.

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS

Cannot be cured with ordinary soothing syrups. The disease must be attacked at the root to eradicate the irritation of the lungs, heal the wounds and strengthen the respiratory organs. The composition of

What a Traveller Saw in Europe.

"During the last thirty-six years I have visited Great Britain and the Continent of Europe thirteen times. This year in England, France, Switzerland, Austria, Germany and Holland I was able to make some comparisons between the present and the recent past that are informing and suggestive," writes Dr. A. E. Dunlap, in the Boston Congregationalist.

A Broadening Interest in Other Peoples.

"One of the evidences of change most patent to the traveller is the growing popular consciousness of the regions beyond. In former times the average man knew little and cared little what was going on outside of his range of work and acquaintance, at any rate outside of his own country. Now he has begun to feel in touch with the world. This is evident in common conversation, in growing uniformity of dress and customs, and notably in newspapers.

America Influences Europe.

"In shops, hotels, and many other places the traveller speaking only English meets those who understand him, where thirty years ago he could rarely make his wants known. He finds that the porter, waiter, shopkeeper, barber, and clerk have been one or more years pursuing their callings in America, and have returned with such advantages in getting employment that many of their neighbors are stimulated to follow their example. During the last four years, for example, 900,000 Italians arrived in the United States, while 500,000 returned to their native country. Poles returning to Poland within the last two years were more than one-half as many as arrived in American ports. We hear a good deal about European nations leaving America through immigration, but probably America is to a greater extent leaving Europe with its ideas and ideals.

Business Expansion Everywhere.

"The expansion of business is everywhere marked. Europe has entered on a new era. No one topic seems to be of greater interest in business circles than the new American tariff and its effects abroad. I spent a few days in Bradford, England, among manufacturers of woolen goods. They were planning for enlargement, eagerly awaiting the action of our Congress. They said their mills would hum as soon as the removal or reduction of duties should give them a change in our markets. The average wages in those mills is about forty per cent. of those in New England, and other differences, as in hours and quality of work and character of employees, will make the new adjustments in trade of much interest.

"On the Continent, especially in Germany, the expansion of business is wonderful. Such cities as Munich, Mayence, Cologne, Dusseldorf and Amsterdam have extended their borders far and wide in the last decade. Munich has become one of the most beautiful cities in Europe. I have seen no more desirable place of residence on the Continent. Many of the smaller towns have grown into cities. All along the Rhine the old castles and fortresses which used to monopolize the attention of travellers now divide it with smoking factory chimneys. Rushing railway trains and whirling automobiles along both sides of the river are obliterating the atmosphere of romance which used to brood over quiet shores and vine-clad hills. The Alps are not losing their grandeur, though the hurried tourist may partly avoid it by rushing through the tunnels bored under them during the last quarter of a century. The Dolomites keep their glory of form and color.

Europe's Abiding Charm.

"But even if one's journey is limited to the beaten paths, any traveller with lively imagination and some historic knowledge can find in Europe what nothing in America can yield to him. None of our cities can offer a view like that from the Maximilian in Munich toward sunset; while the architectural beauty of the London Strand, going toward Temple Bar, not to mention the picturesque-ness of the moving throng, far outdoes the glory of Broadway in New York.
