NATURAL PREFERENCES Versus FUDDYDUDDYISMS.

There is just one thing funnier than the queer fuddyduddysms even the most sensible of people permit themselves to cherish. And that is the way even the most sensible of people will insist that other people's fuddyduddysms are all nonsense.

What is a fuddyduddysm? It is that in another person which in yourself would be merely a perfectly natural antipathy or a perfectly natural preference.

For instance, you have an antipathy to hearing anyone tear cloth. Your neighbor has a fuddyduddysm notion that the noise of a pipe being scraped out is absolutely unendurable.

She Can't Bear to Hear a Curtain Flap.

And the way people will characterize other people's notions as all nonsense with apparent ignorance of the fact that the walls of their house of justice are stone throwing, is truly amusing. Here is one example.

There is a certain man of very robust and not high strung temperament. His wife is the opposite and he is always talking about her notions and saying that they are all nonsense. She can't bear the sound of a curtain flapping at night. Perfect foolishness, he says. Why not forget about it and go to sleep? That's the way he does. She dislikes heavy bed clothing and is much more comfortable under a single blanket and a down puff than under several blankets. Just a notion, he says; she sumpers herself.

We Thought It Was A Burglar.

Now this man once stayed at our house for a night. I thought I had made everything quite comfortable for him, but did not feel obliged to inquire about any particular preferences for I did not think he would leave them. We retired about eleven and had gotten to sleep when we heard a noise downstairs. In due time we discovered it wasn't a burglar—only our guest trying to find himself a lower pillow among the sofa cushions. He was apologetic for disturbing us, of course, but he didn't see how anyone could sleep on those high pillows.

That, you see, wasn't a fuddyduddysm—just a perfectly natural preference!

Each assured the Other His Difficulty Was All Nonsense.

Likewise, I heard another husband and wife discussing a vacation which they were about to take. She wanted to go by boat. He didn't, because he couldn't sleep on the boat if it was at all rough—being tossed about kept him awake. All nonsense, she said; anyone could sleep on the boat if they made up their mind to. A little later she explained her objection to going on the train by saying that she woke up every time the train stopped.

And her husband, of course, assured her that that was all nonsense.

Was it Horace Walpole who said he hoped the angels had a sense of humor, since if they had we must keep them constantly diverted?

Sing and Keep Fit.

Music as a preventive of influenza and other diseases is strongly urged by Dr. Henry Coward, the Sheffield choir-trainer.

"I have in my choir every week in the winter over 1,600 adults," he says. "According to the current statistics, we should have had a great many deaths. Yet we had only two, and I attribute our immunity to a great extent to the music, first because of the health-giving effect of the breathing in singing, and secondly—and perhaps most of all—to the rousing, stimulating, and inspiring effect of music alone."

"Influenza affected the schools because the children were too young to sing much. But the master of a big school in the slums of Sheffield, in which there is a lot of singing, told me that the epidemic did not make any difference in the average attendance. If you have more singing you will have less disease."

Just Folks

Especially a Guest

THREE MEN.

I'd like to steal a day and be all alone with little me. Little me that used to run everywhere in search of fun; Little me of long ago Who was glad and didn't know Life is freighted down with care For the backs of men to bear; Little me who thought a smile Ought to linger all the while On his mother's pretty face And a tear should never trace Lines of sorrow, hurt or care On those cheeks so wondrous fair.

I should like once more to be all alone with little me; Youthful me who saw the hills Where the sun its splendor spills And was certain that in time To the topmost height he'd climb; Youthful me serene of soul, Who beheld a shining goal And imagined he could gain Glory without grief or pain; Confident and quick with life Madly eager for the strife, Knowing not that bitter care Waited for his coming there.

I should like to sit alone With the me now older grown, Like to lead the little me And the youth that used to be Once again in the ways Of our glorious yesterday. We could chuckle soft and low At the things we didn't know And could laugh to think how bold We had been in days of old And how blind we were to care With its heartache and despair, We could smile away the tears And the pain of later years.

Trial of the Kaiser.

The world is now setting a new precedent in putting the Kaiser on trial. But even if there were no precedent for dealing with Wilhelm as a criminal the circumstances would warrant creating one. He was the one man whose word let loose the dogs of war. He could have prevented all the frightfulness that horrified the world. But he would not. If he did not incite his soldiers to the inhuman conduct of which they were guilty, he did nothing to restrain them, and thus gave it his approval. Nor is that all. He intended, if his armies had been victorious, to overrun the whole world. His intentions were even worse than his achievements. In the annals of war no more ruthless criminal has appeared. To treat him so will have a salutary influence upon any military dictator who may arise in the future. The pacifist plea that it will make a martyr of him has no weight. His desertion of his army in the hour of defeat has revealed the contemptible character of the man. He never can be raised to a pinnacle by prosecution and the influence of a just penalty, for his crimes.—The Sentinel.

GRIT.

Some fellows won't stay down when they have hit the floor; if they have lost a round they soon bob up for more. By Fortune biffed and kicked, and swatted on the shins, they don't know when they're licked and take it all with grins. Soon Fortune weary grows of furnishing the gaff, of finding that her blows are greeted with a laugh. She calls off all her bets, resorts to kindly shifts, and makes those fellows pets, and loads them down with gifts. Among successful men you'll find a hundred guys who, floored again, again, still to their feet would rise; they'd spit out broken teeth like Greeks in Homer's pomes, until the victor's wreath was placed upon their domes. Methinks that every gent who to the heights arose has had his features bent by Fortune's shrewish blows. For life is not so soft that any human jay can reach the place aloft on velvet all the way. We all encounter blows, who take the road to win; some land upon the nose, and some upon the chin. The weakling gives a yell when Fortune swats his ear, and has a tale to tell of doubt and dread and fear. The strong man gets his biff, and lets his laugh ascend, and mutters, "What's the diff? I'll get there in the end."

This is to certify that fourteen years ago I got the cords of my left wrist nearly severed, and was for about nine months that I had no use of my hand, and tried other liniments, also doctors, and was receiving no benefit. By a persuasion from a friend I got MINARD'S LINIMENT and used one bottle which completely cured me, and have been using MINARD'S LINIMENT in my family ever since and find it the same as when I first used it, and would never be without it.
