whom he spent most of a day, his eception was tremendously good. He rubbed shoulders with the shipyard Even in places notorious for Red proclivities, the charm of the prince is irresistible. For instance at John Brown & Co.'s yard at Clydebank, after he had launched the Windsor Castle, the prince raced up the steps to the rostrum and cried "Three cheers." The correspondent says, "The sea of workmen's faces broke into smiles. Before the cheers had died away a man in blue overalls with gleaming teeth in a dirty face yelled, 'And one for his nob.' (a reference to the extra point given in the game of cribbage to the holder of one of the jacks.) The prince smiled merrily and waved his hat to the man with "gleaming teeth." As he walked through the great mills thousands of girl employees lined up and sang "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," a song which the prince appears to enjoy more than "God bless the Prince of Wales."
