WEEKLY MEETING. The regular meeting of the Coul Mayor Cook presided and Council-lors Martin, Outerbridge, Vinicombe,

Carnival at the Majestic To-Day.

The story takes place during the annual Carnival, when the whole city puts aside all care for the period of merrymaking which preceeds Lent. "Carnival" 's an ancient custom. The name comes from the two Latin words carno (the flesh) and levare (to put aside), that is, to put aside the flesh, it is to this day a season of drinking, feasting and merrymaking preceding the forty days of denial.

which end at Easter. The custom is a most ancient one entedrting the Church and is really compromise by the early Roman furnalia or season of pagan feast

The picture opens in Venice, time the present, on the day, before the uch of the action takes place in the theatre. Matheson Lang, the great English actor, plays the part of "Sil-vio Steno," a famous Italian player, around whom the action in the story pivots.

In the story "Silvio" goes on the stage as "Othello." To him the part seems exaggerated for he thinks the Moor should never have condemned his wife on such filmsy evidence. Then he finds himself face to face with a similar situation in his own life.

As his own tragedy unfolds, he finds that he must play on the stage the immortal tragedy of the Moor, with his own wife in the role of "Desdemons." To enact a tragedy before an audience, which he is really living in his own person proves too great a strain upon the artist. The outraged but mistaken husband triumphs and the mimic tragedy comes near to becoming a real one before the horrified audience. How the situation straight-audience. How the situation straightems out forms the dramatic conclusion to "Carnival."

Venice at Carnival time. The gondoiss on the Grand Canal, fillel with merrymakers. The wonderful display of night fireworks, the most sumptuous masked ball ever filmed. Thouhands of merrymakers in the most sands of merrymakers in the most fanciful, beautifut, daring, grotesque costumes imaginable. And throughout there runs the sombre thread of the impending tragedy, which fortunately does not eventuate.

Blue Walls and Flies.
