CHAPTER XIV.
A HAPPY HONEYMOON—A VISIT TO SAD SCENES

The sultry glorious August passed away and so happy had they been in the little island that they settled to the middle of September. The first week of the latter month had also passed, and one morning as they sat at breakfast, George, who had been thoughtful during the meal, suddenly caused Harry violently to start by asking abruptly—
"Do you know anything of the family at Ardgowan?"

Harry was raising the cup to his lips as the words were spoken, and the start he gave jerked some of the contents over the side. He set it down unsteamed, his face turned very pale, and an expression of consternation spread over it.
"The family at Ardgowan?" he faltered.

"Aye—the Gibsons? You know them, don't you?"
"I—I did—once. But why do you ask?"

"For this reason," answered George.
"A tutorship?" exclaimed Caroline.
"You become a tutor, George?"

"And there," ejaculated Harry, who had for the moment quite lost command of himself, and had now become as flushed as before he had been pale.

"Why should I not become a tutor?" laughed George. "The salary is better than my remuneration for teaching in the schools of Edinburgh, while there the work is so hard, and the confinement so severe, that a year or two in the country is to me a desirable change."

"But it will take you away from us," cried Caroline, in dismay.
"Well, that is the one hardship connected with it," replied George. "But it is a hardship that will press most upon myself, for you will have a new home now, dear, and a new protector, whose love and companionship will prevent you from missing me much."

"George, George," exclaimed Caroline, rising in haste, and throwing her arms round his neck, "if Harry is my husband, you are my brother—my dear, dear brother, whom I have loved since childhood, and love still more dearly than ever. Neither the discovery made by the packet, nor my marriage must separate us. Harry and I have quite settled it that you are to live with us. A room in our new house has been fitted up for you, and we have called it Brother George's room. So never speak of leaving us, for I cannot, cannot think of it."

"I add my solicitations to Caroline's," cried Harry, with nervous eagerness. "We never dreamed that you would leave us until you followed our example and got married."

"Neither did I think of myself," answered George, as lovingly he stroked Caroline's glossy ringlets. "The idea never occurred to me until—"

"Until the revelation made by the opening of the packet," interrupted Caroline, in hasty tones. "Oh," she added, "I wish father had never left that packet. I wish you had never known that you were not my brother."

"But I am your brother still," returned George. "The contents of a thousand packets cannot destroy or diminish the fraternal affection which exists between us. And it was not the revelation made by the packet which gave me the idea of leaving you, but this letter which I received yesterday from the head-master of Queen Street Academy. He has been asked to recommend a tutor to the family of Mr. Gibson, of Ardgowan, and he has been good enough to name me. He knows how hard I have been wrought of late, and as the duties are much lighter than teaching in Edinburgh, and the salary larger, he advises me to accept the appointment. It will only be for a year or two at the longest, and but for the separation from you and Harry which it will entail, I think it will give me a beneficial change."

"Have you quite made up your mind to go, then?" she tearfully asked.

"Well, on more than one ground I am inclined to accept the offered engagement. The Gibsons, you know, are your mother's family. Your parents—nay, I shall say our parents—"

"Yes, dear George, our parents," added Caroline earnestly.

"Our parents, then," he went on with a smile, "began their married life on their little property near Ardgowan, and I own that I should like to see the place, for their sake and ours."

"But when they know you are, are the Gibsons will not have you as a tutor," said Caroline. "You know how cruelly they used papa and mamma; didn't they Harry?"

"I—I have heard so," said Harry, this appealed to, manifesting unaccountable confusion and distress.

"Yes, indeed," wearily answered. "They never contumaciously them; never held correspondence with them, or gave them any assistance in their deep affliction and poverty. Depend upon it, George, when they know who you are, they will not have you."

South Bruce Nomination.
The nomination for the representation of the South Riding of Bruce in the House of Commons, took place on Thursday in front of the Registry Office, Walkerton, where a commodious hustings had been erected, with a roof to protect the speakers from the heat. About a thousand and electors were present. Sheriff Sutton acted as Returning Officer.

The Hon. Edward Blake was nominated by Mr. Malcolm Campbell, of Lucknow, seconded by Mr. Alexander Gibson, of Teeswater.

Mr. Francis Hurdon, the previous member for the Riding, was nominated by Mr. John Parr, of Culos, seconded by Dr. Bradley, of Kincairdine township.

Mr. S. H. Blake, Hon. A. McKellar, Messrs B. M. Wells, N. Dickey, D. Sinclair, M. P. P., and Dr. Landerkin, M.P., were also nominated, and delivered eloquent and effective addresses to the electors. They all retired in favor of Mr. Blake. Mr. Cliffe, a little man from Kincairdine, was chief spokesman for Mr. Hurdon. He appeared to have got off by rote a part of John A.'s speech, to which he added some windy, absurd remarks of his own. Messrs. Sinclair and McKellar polished him off to the infinite amusement of the Assembly.

Sir John's absence was accounted for by Mr. Hurdon, who said that his chief was lying sick at Kincairdine. Mr. Hurdon himself did not put in an appearance till four o'clock, and it was thought at one time that he would retire from the field, but his friends succeeded in urging him to face the music and become their victim. A poll was demanded on behalf of Mr. Blake, who has the prospect of being elected by a larger majority than he received in 1871. The audience was 20 to 1 in Mr. Blake's favor.

The Largest of any Company in the World.

This Society has led the van in the Insurance world for many years; it has introduced more improvements and given greater impetus to the business than any Life Company in the United States, and is deserving in this respect the praise and gratitude of the community.

There are many reasons for selecting the Equitable Life Assurance Society.
1st—No company has such large annual transactions, thereby infusing into its business a constant accession of fresh and selected lives which is one of the greatest elements of strength.

2nd—Liberality in dealing with all claims: observing at the same time, a due regard to the interests of its present large body of policy-holders by a firm resistance to any attempt at imposition.

3rd—Perfect organization in every department, which renders official information easily attainable and secures a complete administration of its affairs.

4th—Being one of the most progressive institutions of its kind in the world, it is ever prepared to seize at once upon all the improvements in the business that science can suggest.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society issues every recognized form of policy, and especially the

which the Company introduced. This new plan has become very popular, as equalizing among all who are insured under it the advantages which arise from the profits of the business, without in any respect infringing upon the normal results for which Life Insurance was first instituted.

The EQUITABLE feels that it has the strongest claims upon public confidence. Under the management that distinguishes it and the principles by which it is guided, perfect security is given for the future, that which no greater inducement can be held out to all who wish to insure their lives.

Further information regarding the different kinds of Policies issued by the Society can readily be obtained at
