FACTS FOR BUSINESS MEN.

Lies and misrepresentations in advertising usually make good businessfor the sheriff.

In selecting media the rate ought not to be the sole basis of consideration. It is quite an easy matter to attract attention. The advertisement ought not only attract attention, but it ought to present such an inviting appearance as to induce the reader to read the advertisement.

The efficacy of a medium can only be determined by the amount of business it brings, not by the number of replies. An advertisement in a certain paper may bring but one response, but this one response may be the means of developing a thousand dollars worth of business. On the other hand, same advertisement in anothmay bring one hundred will result in no busin-

HOICE makes character is always tending to permanence. And permanent character is destiny."

Such was the salient point of last evening's sermon preached at St. Andrew's Church by Rev. Probert John ston, D.D., to a large and much impressed audience. The text was taken from Revelations, xx., "And the books were opened; another book was opened which the book of Mafe; and the dead were adged out of those things which were written in the books, according to heir works." The subject of the sermou was "The Problem of Destiny."

Dr. Johnston opened his discourse with the thought that the problem of destiny was one in which we naturally should be interested, yet what theme was put so far from us? The only book that told us of the life beyond was the Book of Revelations, and even here we did not find description, but merely suggestion. The eternal life suggested was one of activity in the service of the Almighty. He wondered sometimes if there would be other worlds to save. Separation from God meant eternal darkness. Let all that characterized love and light be taken out of the world and the blank left, and that would be hell. For all that is good would be carried to its highest realization; all that is evil would be descended to the lowest depths of its realization. That was the life that awaited us on the one side or the

The pastor then brought out the important distinction that that event which would mark the close of human probation would be a judgment and not a trial. Our life was our trial, and the judgment would be the manifesting of the character which had been melded in life. PRESCHER FROM HONAN. Rev. Dr. Fraser Smith, of Honan, China, occupied the pulpit of the King Street Presbyterian Church last night His address on the life of Daniel was forceful and instructive and was listened to with close attention by the congregation. The inspiration of his remarks was the eighth verse of the first chapter of Daniel. Those who read the history of Daniel must become profoundly interested, he said. His traits were best described by the word singular. He was a man of good and great earnest-Even the heathen worshiped him because of his faithfulness and firm resolve not to "go with the crowd.' This was probably because he realized that the all-seeing eye of God was upon him and, Dr. Fraser said, it was regrettable that so many did not have firmness enough to prevent them from drifting which ever way the majority said was best. Danie went among a strange people who had never felt the touch of God's hand, and by always acting as Jehovah directed, rose to so mighty a position that his rivals in their efforts to bring about his overthrow, were forced to attack him by prevailing on the king to do away with those believing in God's word. Daniel's singularity made his enemies respect him and resort to evil methods of accomplishing his downfall. His faithfulness to God and to his friends was his most beautiful and lovable characteristic. He did not forget in prosperity, those he had known in poverty. He and his companions were like an oasis in a desert of iniquity. The resolution which Daniel had at first made was his preservation. It was not a lip resolve, but resolve from the heart. Because of half-hearted resolutions, the speaker said, much of the evil in the world was caused. Daniel's firmness and faithfulness could be put on a pedestal, second only to that of Jesus, as a model for true Christian sincerity.
