I were dead and thou should vanure lear the coffin where I lay. I should know it. I should kno Miss Dane made every effort to keep her klentity a secret and she succeeded admirably. She probably came here from Canada after being crossed in a love affair or having succentred some other great trouble. She had good reasons for wishing to keep her identity secret—she found her money running low and knew that she must ere long tall her story in some hospital. This she dreaded to do. The silence of the grave was preferable.

One week ago yesterday this young woman called upon Mrs. Charles J. Morris at 152 Third-avenue and asked to see the furnished rooms Mrs. Morris advertised to let. Mrs. Morris is the wife of a stenographer employed in the chemical house of Wing & Evans, No. 50 William-street. She came from Toronto and her visitor introduced herself as Miss Dane, also of Toronto.
