Poetry.

DEAR AULD SCOTLAND.

I love thee, dear auld Scotland, thou hast fostered not a few Bold heroes, such as Wallace, Bruce, and Douglas, tried and true; And Randolph, Haylock, Moore, and Clyde and Wolfe, of warlike fame; Though they are dead their name still live Each one a household name.

I love thee, dear auld Scotland, what glories Thy sons have braved, nobly proved they know not how to yield; They have fought in India, Russia, Spain and Portugal as well, And never were known to yield, though many of them fell.

Then hurrah, hurrah, for Scotland, her mountains and her dales, For her forests, lakes, and rivers, and her flowers bespangled vales; May the sun of bright prosperity shine sweetly and serene On the land of bonnie Scotland, where the heather grows so green.

thing—house and household goods.

not even taking the benefit which the law allowed him. Yet there was not wanting among the injured who openly asserted their belief that Mr. Phillips had actually saved money by the operation, and even cited his utter relinquishment of all visible property as a proof that he was remunerated by that which was unseen.

His friends forsook him, one by one dropping off, unable to vouch for his innocence. His health failed, and even if it had not, he could not have witnessed the public sale, which was now announced, of his household treasures.

He had tortured himself by throwing into his creditor's hands even little trifling moments of the past—literally leaving everything in his house, save his own clothing and his private desk, which, whatever others thought, contained little but family letters, and the miniature of a little child, with a curl of golden hair at the back of the lock.

That child! Oh, if he could but now recall the past! If he had but spoken kindly and forgivingly, that child might now have been near to save his gray hairs from shame and disgrace.

There was, as we have said, a public sale. It comprised the stores and household goods, and included a valuable horse, which Mrs. Phillips' falling health had induced him to buy, and which he would not part with after her death. The man had a tender spot in his heart after all. His first question, when the man who had been his clerk came into his solitary room at a boarding house, the night after the sale, was:

'Who bought Fleetwood?'
'I did not know the man, sir. He was a stranger. There were many strangers there, and I did not learn the name of him who purchased the horse.
He was in the house a good part of the time, and I noticed that he bid for a number of things.'

'I hope Fleetwood has a kind master,' observed Mr. Phillips, after a pause.

The clerk was going, but returned, after a short parley with some one at the door.

'Here's a man, sir, who wishes you to meet him at the house you occupied, at half-past nine this evening.'

'What can any one want of me there?' said Mr. Phillips, with an uneasy gesture.

'I cannot tell, sir. I did not know the man, but from the dim glance I had of him at the door, I should say it was the man who was bidding upon the horse when I came away, and the same
who bought Fleetwood.'

'I must go, I suppose; yet, if he is a gentleman, I should hardly think he would expose me to the pain of going there.'

Mr. Phillips walked to his own house with a penny from a poor child, and feeling like a man who had numbered twice his years. He reached the door that once opened to his familiar touch and rang the bell. The woman who had so long kept his house opened that door; and, ushering him to the sitting-room, from which, years ago, he had ordered his boy from his sight forever.

This thought flashed into his mind, that he was more vivid from the circumstances of his own arm chair being removed out of its ordinary place, and set in the middle of the room, and a low chair directly in front of it, on which Samuel had leaned in passionate weeping up friends to the sitting-room.
That night, had left his cap banging on the corner of that low chair; and, as if to deepen the father's anguish to night, a boy's cap hung there again. How well that name! He remembered it! How he remembered it! How he looked with the memories that rose up in his mind!

His fearful eyes scarcely took in the figure of a noble looking gentleman who now entered the room, and desired him to walk around the house. Every piece of furniture was in its old place, in his own chamber, the little arrangements of his dressing-table were precisely as they always were; and in a little bedroom beside it, were the two small beds in which his boys used to sleep.

He looked up at his conductor through his fast falling tears. Something in his face, in the bright, flashing eyes of the stranger, went to his heart.
They had returned to the sitting room, and the stranger held his hand with a warm, loving grasp. He heard the words, 'This is all yours, dear father!' and then the two men sank together upon their knees, while the younger breathed out a fervent thanksgiving that he had been spared to comfort and console him in his hour of adverse fortune.

Stung with his father's cruel words, Samuel Phillips had deserted his home driven almost to desperation, and had wandered away from the place that knew him to a far city. Providence raised up friends to the desolate boy. He found himself trusted, honored, respected; and at the death of one who had been as a father to him, he became wealthy. He saw the notice of the sale in a newspaper—hurried on to prevent it, and arrived only when it had already commenced.

He had heard of his mother's death, and from that time he resolved never to return. But when he found that his father was in real distress, all was forgotten, save the thought that he might be in time to save him from open disgrace or actual want. Everything had fallen into his hands, for the bystanders saw that he was determined to possess all, and they gave way to his evident desire and ability to gratify it.
The reconciliation was complete. The pride of the father was subdued. Reinstated in his old home, his habits, all met, and his business re-established, by the son whom he had banished, his heart had melted to a child-like humility that was touching to behold.

It is well to be polite under all circumstances; but nevertheless remember that many a man has been a heavy loser all through civil action.

What other dungeon is so dark as one's own heart? What jailer so inexorable as one's self?

During the great storm in Ohio a train of cars ran into a tunnel near North Bend, in which the water was so deep that it put out the fire in the locomotive, and over a hundred passengers were imprisoned. Another train would be due in an hour, and it was necessary that somebody should get out of the tunnel and reach a neighboring signal to prevent a terrible disaster.

The water was about four feet deep, and running swiftly.—A young man whose name is not given in the Cincinnati Times' account of the occurrence, volunteered for the exploit. The total darkness increased the danger, and the distance was an eight of a mile. The young man removed his boots and coat and plunged in. The current carried him along, and he easily kept his head above water, although collisions among the rocky sides of the tunnel nearly disabled him, but he made the passage and stopped the threatening train.— In the meantime the passengers in the tunnel were trembling with hope and fear, and the suspense was not relieved until several hours later, the water subsided, the fire in the locomotive was rekindled, and their journey was continued.

Flowers

Amongst the pleasant things of life—and the all-bountiful hand of Providence has scattered the path of our days with innumerable pleasant things, if man would but enjoy them—amongst them all the pleasant things of life, there are few more pleasant than a walk in the flower-garden before breakfast on a sunny morning. To see those mute and still, though not motionless, creatures—mean the blossoms—opening their painted petals to the beneficent rays which give them their color and their loveliness, welcoming the calm blessing of the light, as if with gratitude, and seeking, in their tranquil state of being, for nothing but the good gifts of God, might well afford a momentary lesson; for everything in nature has its homily to us, the eager hunter after terrestrial enjoyment. How calm do they stand in their loveliness, how placid in their limited fruition of the element that that nourishes them—how, in their splendid raiment, do they sparkle in the sun, how they drink up the cup of dew, and gratefully give back honey and perfume in return!—Elean Cook's Journal.
