One may eat without tables,

sit without chairs, trade without counters, walk without shoes, or ride without horses; but no line of business, no kind of society and no form of education can begin or be conducted without the use of type and ink.

You know that, don't you?

But do you know that the better class of work should be given to the printer who uses the most improved printing machinery and employs the men best able to do good work?

If not, it is time you did.

We use the most improved machinery and employ clever workmen. Therefore we are good printers and you ought to send us your work.
