

is just as fatal as inbreeding amongst a herd of cattle. It would not be in the best interests of McGill to have none but McGill graduates on its staff. I may be blind, but I have never seen any evidence on the part of members of the staff of the University to deal unfairly with graduates, or that would indicate an unwillingness to support McGill graduates. Have you ever examined the constituency of the staff of McGill and noticed the very high percentage of McGill graduates on it?

I would not care to have you retain a wrong impression, and I suggest that you boldly go to Dean Clarke and discuss the matter further with him. Your good will to the University is earnestly solicited.

Ever yours faithfully,

Principal
