THE ARLINGTON'S SMOKER

The Arlington Club Friday night gave the second of their series of smoking concerts to about 55 invited guests. The forepart of the evening was spent at whist, Mr. Robert Galpin being the lucky winner of the prize. During the latter part of the evening songs were exceptionally well rendered by Messrs. R. Albert Brown, Guy Lombardo, Bert Barr, Frank Asplund and Wm. Tambling. The committee were also very fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Frank Murphy, who gave several recitations, which brought forth hearty applause. The duet rendered by Messrs. Brown and Lombardo was one of the best selections heard in this city for some time, and reflects great credit on the two gentlemen, who will no doubt be persuaded to render it again at some future concert. Music was also furnished by the orchestra, after which, at the close of the concert, which was a success in every respect, due to the music committee, composed of Messrs. Dr. Silk (Chairman), Harry Rananah, Fred Coles and John Collison, Dr. Silk thanked those who had so kindly assisted during the evening, and assured the guests that as the committee intended giving monthly concerts during the winter this was but the commencement of the good times they hoped to spend together.

EVERY-DAY RELIGION

Rev. Dr. Thompson, of Sarnia, Discourses on the Subject.

The preacher yesterday, at the anniversary services of Knox Church, South London, was Rev. Dr. Thompson, of Sarnia.

The services were successful. The choir, under Mr. Fred L. Evans, was in good form. Miss Leys sang "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," admirably. The collection was $207—with more to come.

The morning discourse dealt with the meekness and gentleness of Christ, and its bearing upon religion and humanity. He referred to the time when Jesus laid down his tools; put aside his private life, and left mother, home and friends, to begin the second part of his life, the public part. His private life was closed forever. He had done strange things; he had gone on curious errands; he had made unusual statements. It was plain now what was the matter. His mind had given way. He was beside himself—a disordered thing for anyone to say, even if true; worse for a mother to say regarding her own son, and then to have his brothers and sisters chiming in and saying: "He is beside himself, we must restrain him." Too bad, there was not one of his own family to stand by him; not one spot on all the earth where he could rest in peace. He had to be without a mother's love and a sister's tender regard. Yet through it all he never murmured. All the people said he was beside himself, and it became the common judgment. If he had lived today we would have called him a member of the Salvation Army. He had acted altogether beneath the dignity of his family. The holy life was always singular. It was very easy to be John the Baptist, as far as the wilderness was concerned. Living a rude, uncultured life some people called their religion. It was the only religion some had. But the brave spirit that stuck to truth, though kings be offended was not imitated so often. We could strain at gnats and swallow camels, strange to say. But to follow the Saviour in his gentleness and holiness of life and in the honest love to man and loyalty to God—the Father was the true test of imitation. The life of Jesus was as natural as it was gentle. What a holy man is John, they said. But when they saw Jesus they said: How natural, how gentle, how human, and how real is the life of Jesus. They never thought of holiness. John's life startled multitudes. Jesus did not separate himself from life as John did. He lived among men, and so they called him the friend of publicans and sinners, and of wine bibbers. He came not to overthrow the state. He did not separate himself from society. A great many people make their religion wholly negative. Some preachers were wholly denunciatory. Some men denounced dancing, and others eating meat at certain seasons of the year. But Jesus denounced nothing but sin. Many called this negative thing their religion. What was religion? We might as well seek to fatten on the east wind as to grow in grace under certain ministrations and certain lines of teaching. We must, if we would have religion, seek something far above us. We thought church-going and hymn-singing our religion. All these things were simply a means to feed us. Religion was not confined to the house of worship or the prayer meeting or the family altar. It was so broad it covered all life, all transactions of everyday life. The Lord Jesus Christ did not come to this earth to save a few souls. He came to sanctify human conduct and to save the world. We said, he seemed to have failed in his purpose. He has not failed. He will save the world and he was saving it now. And when he said, Thy kingdom come, we did not mean his kingdom in a few hearts and some few out in China and Japan. We meant the whole nation of Japan and of China, and all the islands of the sea. He came to sanctify all human life. So we saw the religion belonging to daily life. We were not to be religious here and secular at next week. Some people divided their lives into two parts, the religious and the secular. They had a kitchen where they could do all manner of dirty work, and a parlor where they entertained their God. They called that their religious life. Jesus worshiped his Father all the day long and each day, and he would have you, his professing people, to follow in his steps. Through all life we could have God as partner in the common duties of life. Religion belonged to the common life. We judged sins by their outward appearance. But it was not discouraging to God for man to sin in his higher nature than in that nature that linked him to the beast. And yet we heard nothing about that. Drunkenness was always an evil. But envy and covetousness and greed and the evil tongue—how often did we hear of them so spoken about? We had committees of the General Assembly to watch against drunkenness, but none to watch against the evil tongue or greed or covetousness. But this was more to be condemned than the other. Christ forbids drunkenness, but he did not condemn the use of drink. He made it and he used it. And the church must draw the line as he would draw it. The state had no power to do anything else. The reverend gentleman made an appeal, in closing, for a religion that was not something so distant, so unreal, so separated from common life.

Lady Burdett-Coutts is the Grand Old Lady of the peerage, for she is 84. More wonderful still, however, is Lady Mary Saurin, who not long since celebrated her 98th birthday, and recently "arrived in town for the season."

LIFE SAVED.—Mr. James Bryson Cameron writes: "I was confined to my bed with inflammation of the lungs and was given up by physicians. A neighbor advised me to try Dr. Thompson's Electric Oil, stating that his wife had used it for a throat trouble with the best results. Acting on this advice, I procured the medicine, and less than half a bottle cured me. I certainly believe it saved my life. It was with reluctance that I consented to a trial, as I was reduced to such a state that I doubted the power of any remedy to do me good."

KILLED BY WHITE-CAPS.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 21.—John Smartt, a well-disposed colored citizen, living at Chasestown, one and a half miles from Smartt's Station, in Warren county, Tennessee, was shot and killed by white-caps Friday night. The white-caps had served notice upon Mack Smartt, son of the old man. At a late hour 23 men visited his house. Mack was ordered to come out, but refused, whereupon coal oil was poured on the side of the house, but not ignited. A torch was lighted, and placed near the house, and old man Smartt, thinking the house was on fire, rushed out into the yard, where he was shot and died instantly. The weapon used was a shotgun.
