

WILL SAUNDERS HAS GAINED 25 POUNDS

Feels Like Brand New Man Since Taking Tanlac Says Kings County Man.

"Tanalac has not only relieved my troubles, but has built me up as well as that of an underweight man. I am feeling like a brand new man," recently declared William J. Saunders, of Kings County, N. B.

"For five years my stomach was in such a terrible condition that at times I could hardly retain a glass of water, and the little I did force myself to eat, I would suffer after eating, and at times I would feel as if I were being choked in my throat. I simply dreaded food, and I was so weak I could hardly do a lick of work."

"I frequently had headaches and dizzy spells, when everything seemed to swim before my eyes, and I would have to close my eyes for a moment or two before I could get on my feet. I used to roll and toss in the bed for hours at night unable to sleep, and in the mornings always felt tired and irritable."

"The very first bottle of Tanlac did me good, and I have been picking up right along ever since. I am now feeling like a brand new man, and I can do anything and never have a particle of indigestion. As I said before I have gained twenty-five pounds in weight, and am so much stronger than I was. The day's work is a pleasure instead of a drag. I don't have those terrible spells of dizziness any more and I sleep like a log at night. Tanlac certainly is an A-1 medicine and I shall recommend it every chance I get."

"Tanalac is sold in St. John by Ross & Co. and F. W. Munro under the personal direction of a special Tanlac representative. Adv.

FEED PIGS ON FINE PEACHES

Half Million Dollar Crop Going to Waste in Michigan.

Chicago, Sept. 23.—A half million dollars worth of the finest fruit crop in Michigan is being wasted, it is estimated by experts here, because of a shortage of hogs to eat it. The fruit is being grown in five years' time on the ground, four hours from Chicago, by boat or rail. This estimate was made by expert growers to an investigation for the Chicago Daily News. Men interviewed declared the crop of peaches, pears, apples, plums and cantaloupes to be worth from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000. Thousands of bushels of fine peaches are being fed to the hogs or dumped on the ground to rot, it was said.

The Reasons Given.

Farmers, committee men and farm organization experts gave various reasons for the situation. Some of these were: shortage, inability of hogs to handle the huge crop, a sudden general ripening due to the late warm weather, and "wasting" by commission men through "jokers" in contracts made last spring with the growers.

Peaches which sell in Chicago for $2.50 to $3.50 a bushel, in the Benton Harbor market bring 75 cents to $1.25—and the farmers declare the cheapness of peaches they have raised have cost them $1.25.

JAPANESE SHIP COMBINE TO MEET U. S. COMPETITION

By GLENN BABE. (Copyright, 1920, by Public Ledger.)

Tokyo, Sept. 22.—In order, primarily, to meet the expected competition from the American merchant marine, Japanese shipping magnates and government officials are now working out plans for the amalgamation of all the empire's principal shipping companies engaged in the foreign carrying trade. Utaro Noda, minister of communications, who favors the proposed amalgamation, today said:

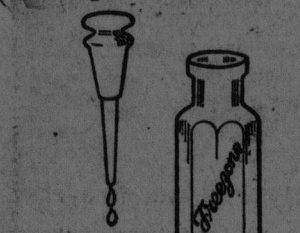

"While present circumstances are not in favor of the nationalization of shipping, the government will lend its full support to the now well-developed project for a shipping combine."

"This step," he said, "is advisable both to meet the present depression in the shipping market and to meet foreign competition. Amalgamation may take the form of absorption by the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, of other companies, although it has been stated that Nippon Yusen has not yet agreed to the combine plans. It is certain that amalgamation will be the direct result of American activity on the Pacific routes and the imminent operation of the Jones bill."

"Gratitude is the fairest blossom which springs from the soul; and the heart of man knoweth some more fragrant."

"CORN"

Lift Right Off Without Pain

"Don't hurt a bit! Drop a little 'Bacon' on an aching corn, instantly you lift it right off with fingers. Truly! Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of 'Bacon' for a few cents, sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes and the callus, without excruciating irritation."

CHURCH HAS CLOCK WESLEY GAVE IN 1767

New York, Sept. 23.—Clockmakers nowadays would have little regretting if their work stood up as well as that of an unidentified maker almost two hundred years ago. In the midst of New York's busiest district, at 44 John Street stands the famous old John Wesley Methodist Church and witness to the long history of the church hangs an old pendulum clock on the wall of the basement meeting room.

More than 163 years ago John Wesley for himself, founder of Methodism in England, sent the clock over here to Philip Embury for use in the original building of the church, erected through the efforts of Embury. Once a week John V. Westland assumes the responsibility of winding up the single heavy weight with the original hand-made key and if folks would only leave the clock alone," he declares, "and not try to see it so often, as though it were one of these modern up-to-second affairs, it would keep the best time in the world."

At any rate the works—which are said to be of wood, though Mr. Westland has never had occasion to open the big painted face and examine them—have marked off the hours for hundreds of services without a murmur.

Two buildings have preceded the present church edifice. The first, erected in 1768 through the valiant efforts of Embury, was outgrown in time; the second was found by a city ruler to be out of the building line, and the present edifice, while comparatively modern, retains the appearance of age by its dingy, unpretentious interior and the simple lines of pillars and galleries.

In the downstairs meeting room are the plain, strongly built wooden desk and altar rail in daily use—the handiwork of the pioneer hands of Philip Embury. In this room noontide meetings are conducted, not by the church, but by the business men's meeting group, composed of business men and women in the vicinity, who arrange for the lay speakers and music themselves.

Tanalac is sold in St. John by Ross & Co. and F. W. Munro under the personal direction of a special Tanlac representative. Adv.

FAKE PRINCES AND KINGS IN BERLIN JAIL

Bogus Royalties Swindle Rich Girls Into Marriage Even in Most Socialistic Centres.

(Copyright, 1920, by Cross-Atlantic.)

Berlin, Sept. 23.—No less important personages than two "princes" and one "king" have just fallen into the hands of the Berlin criminal police. The exact title of the third, to which his colleagues and the authorities have given full recognition for several years, is "King of the Safe-crackers," and he will now have to exercise his skill on prison locks if he wishes to resume his sovereignty.

The amazing exploits of the two other royalties, however, deserve greater attention, if only because of the romance and supreme impudence with which they were carried out. Some time ago there arrived in Berlin, Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, further distinguished as papers showed, with the title "Prince of the Tartars." To make ends meet he found it desirable to make a good matrimonial match.

Got a Bride.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incomplete, he would like something to go on with.

Suspected Her Husband.

The lady promptly contributed, but soon after grew suspicious of the bridegroom's story and consulted the police, with the result that Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, Prince of the Tartars, was identified as a tumbler who had found, that handing out "gold bricks" to innocent frauleins was an easier way of getting rich than laying real bricks.

The second adventurer was not quite so ambitious as his prototype, contenting himself with the designation, "Stanislaus Leo, Prince of St. Richa Wolvode." Going into business he opened the "Berlin Office Syndicate" for Europe and Asia, which he announced to a wealthy lady, also anxious to become a princess, had branches all over the world. The lady agreed to marry him, and brought a dowry of over $60,000. Shortly afterwards, a quarrel occurred, and the lady took possession of the office as "security" for her money, only to find that the office and fittings had been obtained on the strength of Leo's acquaintance with the aforementioned "Prince of the Tartars."

Both princes are now dwelling in the imposing castle used by the Berlin police for housing their guests.

Make good stoves and cooking utensils.

FAKE PRINCES AND KINGS IN BERLIN JAIL

Bogus Royalties Swindle Rich Girls Into Marriage Even in Most Socialistic Centres.

(Copyright, 1920, by Cross-Atlantic.)

Berlin, Sept. 23.—No less important personages than two "princes" and one "king" have just fallen into the hands of the Berlin criminal police. The exact title of the third, to which his colleagues and the authorities have given full recognition for several years, is "King of the Safe-crackers," and he will now have to exercise his skill on prison locks if he wishes to resume his sovereignty.

The amazing exploits of the two other royalties, however, deserve greater attention, if only because of the romance and supreme impudence with which they were carried out. Some time ago there arrived in Berlin, Count von Berinski-Bogdanoff, further distinguished as papers showed, with the title "Prince of the Tartars." To make ends meet he found it desirable to make a good matrimonial match.

Got a Bride.

Even in the Socialistic Republic of Germany there are apparently many ladies ambitious to become princesses, so the Russian "aristocrat" quickly found a bride who, after contributing 20,000 marks (nominally about $5,000) to the household and the brief honeymoon, went off to Switzerland as "Countess Dornik-Bogdanoff, Princess of the Tartars." The deserted husband soon felt in need of both companionship and funds, and following the same procedure, told his second bride of his great possessions in Russia, how he was selling his estates to an American, and how, in the meantime, he in Berlin being rather expensive and the transaction incom-

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

FOR HEADACHE, NEURALGIA, INFLUENZA AND ALL PAIN

Anti-Kamnia TABLETS

FOR HEADACHE, NEURALGIA, INFLUENZA AND ALL PAIN

The demand has been so great that in future we will have

Cream Puffs, Chocolate Eclairs and Other Cream Goods, Every Day

Did you ever have that grand and glorious feeling? Well, this is what you have while and after eating our

Breads, Rolls, Cakes, Pastries, Etc.

Store full to the brim for the week-end business.

THE BUSY BEE

Corner Princess and Charlotte Streets.

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Net Surplus, $15,440.71

Business Cards

AUTO GAS AND OILS.
THE CURB FILLING STATION, 25 King St. E. of Montreal. Prop. Day and Night. High Grade Filled Gasoline and Lubricating Oil. Care Filled at Our Front Door. FREE AIR.

AUTO GARAGE.
MARITIME GARAGE, Carleton—Auto Repairs, Storage and Accessories. W. 134.

AUTO PAINTING, BLACKSMITHING.
W. G. DALRY, 2 Marsh Bridge; Auto and Garage Painting by Thoroughly Trained Men. Rubber Tire Applying.

AUTO RADIATORS REPAIRED.
McAULEY AND ROBERTS, 111 St. J. Street. Auto Radiator Repairs. Damaged and Broken Radiators Repaired. Specialized Copper Tubing. McKinnon's Radiators. M. 44.

AUTO REPAIRS.
EAST END AUTO CAR CO., 56 Brunswick St., General Motor Repairs in All Departments. M. 276-31. H. F. Wynn, Mgr.

AUTO SERVICE.
ROYAL AUTO SERVICE, F. H. Tait, 12 Paddock St.; When You Need a Car, Call Us. High Class Cars at Regular Rates. Business, Pleasure, Marriages and All Occasions. Day or Night. M. 404. M. 234-21.

AUTO STARTING AND IGNITION.
J. ADAMS, 111 St. J. Street. Auto Starting, Ignition and Ignition Troubles. Also Electrical Vibrators Repaired. M. 262.

AUTOS (USED CARS).
NEW BRUNSWICK AUTO EXCHANGE, 112 Main St., High Class, Guaranteed Used Cars. All Makes. Repairs, Accessories, etc. M. 4012.

AUTO WELDING.
ST. JOHN WELDERS AND ENGINEERS LTD., 25 Brimley St., Auto Welding of All Kinds. Oxy-Acetylene Process. Also Marine and Stationary Engines and Boilers. M. 297.

AUTO TIRES ACCESSORIES.
AUTO TIRES AT CUT PRICES, 303-1-2 Docks St. Open Evenings.

AUTO MECHANIC.
WM. W. GARNETT, 354 Union St., Auto Mechanic and Electric. Repairs and Rebuilds. Tires, Tubes, Radiators, etc. Second-hand Magnets and Coils Always on Hand.

BAKERS.
ST. JOHN BAKERY, 11 Hammond St.; "Standard" Bread, Cakes and Pastry. Noted for Quality and Cleanliness. H. Taylor, Prop. M. 216.

HYGIENIC BAKERY.
T. P. Kelly, Prop., 128 Main St.; "Quality is Our Motto." Cakes, Pastry and Bread. M. 1167.