

Fur Sale at St. Louis.

The largest fur auction ever in this country or in Europe, over $15,000,000 took place in St. Louis, at the auction International Fur Exchange. 100 buyers in attendance, a number of them representing Europe and the number of pelts sold amounted to the value of 13,000,000.

Offered are by no means all they represent every climate of the world that contain animals. They also include from the most rare Russian mine to the humble chipmunked cat. A canvas from Siberia, only two feet high and perhaps a foot wide, was offered for $90,000, so choice is it contained.

Exception of the Australian land rabbits, which number in the pound, all sales were sold. It would be impossible to sell a number of skins during the ten days of the sale were not for a system of marketing. Pelts are graded and are catalogued as I, II, III, etc.

Both the trappers and send furs to the St. Louis the foreign and American to there for the skins that later as luxurious garments adjuncts to cloth suits and absolute confidence in the fur system.

Features of the auction was in prices paid for all native muskrat.

Possum, skunk, lynx, all exceeded prices. The high such as the Alaskan blue a figure that showed an increase of 100 to 135 per cent.

Selected for rare pelts included an sable at $1,200, and a lot at an average of $500 each. These are exceptional values those put on rare jewels.
