I may say, Mr. Editor, that it was decidedly the best Fin. District Meeting I have had the pleasure of attending. The greatest harmony and good feeling pervaded the minds of the Brethren, and a gracious and heavenly influence rested upon all. We all feit our accountability to God, and determined, by His grace, to live whose this report is very much exaggerated.

We hope this report is very much exaggerated.

We have much reason to thank the Giver of all good for the bountiful manner in which He has bestowed His gifts upon us this year—both land and sea having yielded of their abundance in great profusion; and it behoves our people to show how highly they esteem such blessings, by their legitimate use of them. Depend upon it, future comfort and well-being are the result of present industry and thrift. to God, and determined, by His grace, to live present industry and thrift.

Church. In the evening he preached in St Peter's Church, a new building not yet completed, with a very steep hail-splitting roof. It is supplied with a chancel, is without galleries, and is intended to be a sort of Catherral Church, the ideas of the clergyman, the Rev Mr Hodgson (nephew of the Administrator of the Govern ment) being of the most approved (or dis approved) high church fashion. The seats are very plain chairs, along the back of each of which is strewn a small hassock, to be used in kneeling. The ladies and gentlemin sit apart, though last evening the fair ritualists so far outnough last evening the fair ritualists so far outnumbered the males that they had to commingle in an uneccleriastical u anner. The Church was crowded to excess, and great numbers had to go away without admission. The Vesiry is on the right side of the chancel and the organ on the left the latter being out of sight. The comming left, the latter being out of sight. The service is conducted by choristers, men and boys, clad in white linen surplices. They marched in from the vestry to the church and the chancel two abreast, singing a hymn, and retired from it in the same manner. The Bishop's crosser was borne along in the procession. It was placed in the Bishop's left hand by the efficiating clergy-man at the close; with the other uplifted he pronounced the benediction.

The service was choral throughout, in the s'yle of Trinity Church or S'. Alban's, New York. It is reedless to say that St. John could produce nothing of the kind, in gestures or chorals or symbolism, nor do I think Freder-ickton could do so. The sermon was an earnest apology for Ritualistic worship, so-called, and contained pointed allusions to the want of thancel and other ecclesisstical defects found in the other Episcopal Church in the City; at the same time, the B shop said those who preferred the me dest worship should not judge those who choose the other. Each should be fully persuaded in his own mind. The Congregation comprised many not connected with the Church, of other Protestant denominations, and was informed, several, Roman Catholics who had worshipped in St. Dunstan's in the morning, where the music is very fine.
