Lady Marjorie's Love

"I—we"—he faltered and spoke without looking at her—"we fancied that you were abroad—decided at last that you must be. That then was wrong?"

"Quite wrong. I have never been out of London."

"She had entirely recovered herself now, and spoke with a sad and level composure, all outward signs of emotion subdued. Looking at her, he saw that her figure was less rounded, her eyes were a little sunken, the outline of her cheek was sharpened, that a melancholy air lay upon her beauty like a tangible thing. Remembering her as she had been when last he saw her, the breath he drew was short and fierce when he gently took her hand again.

"You wondered why, after so long, a second search was set afoot, Norah?" "No," she answered quietly. "I understand. I knew your friend had seen me."

"You saw him then?"

"Yes. It is rather strange that it was only on that day that I first knew you were here." The faint, dreary smile crossed her lips again, and she made a little gesture, checking the question which he would have quickly asked. "It was very easy to find out," she said. "I have done more than that, Gerald! I have seen you more than once, and I have seen him. Once you were together, but neither of you saw me or suspected me, although I was so near I could have touched you—I managed too well. Practice makes perfect at cunning and deception, I suppose," she concluded bitterly.

"You knew so long ago as that?" "There was reproach in his voice as well as wonder. Understanding both she dropped her head on the hand that clasped hers.

"Oh! I know what you mean, Gerald! I understand you, dear. You think, even though I had closed the door of our home upon myself, although for very shame I could not face him that still I might have trusted and come to you. Oh, if you knew how I yearned with all my heart to do it, and yet did not dare! I would not have come to-day—I struggled against it—but I was sick with the longing—even to hear him—just a word—to see you, if only for a moment! So I came." She glanced towards the open window. "If you had not come out," she said, "I should have the courage, I wonder, to let you know that I was there?"

"Norah, my dear girl, hush, hush! To whom should you come if not to me?"

He still held her hand. As in answer and thanks her fingers closed upon his, his eye for the first time caught the glimmer of a plain gold ring—He touched it.

"Your wedding ring, Norah?"

She started violently, and turned away from him in miserable and significant silence. It had been in no hope that he asked the question, and the reply was but too plain. Both sat in a wretched silence—of what use were words?"

He broke it. He started impetuously to his feet in a sudden outburst of rage. So far he had firmly and steadily controlled himself, had for her sake forced himself to be quiet, calm, gentle, that he might the better soothe, comfort, and reassure her. But, looking at her now, with her head drooping, her eyes avoiding him, the traces of tears still upon her face, her hands hanging inertly, the whole pose of her figure hopeless, all spirit and pride dead and quenched, her very beauty a dead and branded thing, all the generous passion of wrath that he had driven to bridle broke beyond his hold. He started up with a clenched hand.

"Norah, how was it? In the name of Heaven how did it all come about? I had been in the dark, utterly in the dark, since the blow fell. I am in the dark still. We both are. It has all been speculation, conjecture, supposition. That letter you left—it told us nothing—I suppose was meant to tell us nothing?" He stopped before her for he had been pacing rapidly up and down his movements as vehement as his speech. "Good heavens, do you know that we are absolutely ignorant of who the man was, what his name, even where you met him? I had a fancy—at my wits' end to comprehend it all—that it must have been in that wretched country place where you have been staying. Was it?"

"Yes," she said faintly.

"I was right then!" He paced to and fro and halted again. "Norah, how was it? What brought it about? If you had been an empty-headed girl, ignorant, frivolous, child-headed, weak, thoughtless, it would have been at least understandable; but you a woman, beautiful, proud, with courage, intelligence, spirit, resolution, how did it come about?"

"I loved him!" she answered.

The tone rather than the words struck him mute, still more the look with which she spoke them. In the moment of his silence she rose, putting her hands upon his shoulders, fixing her wide, shining eyes upon his.

"I loved him!" she repeated slowly. "Listen to my only excuse, Gerald the only palliation of my folly and worse than folly that I can offer to you, the only wretched plea that I can urge in my own defence. Ah, my dear, all the qualities you have cited—I suppose I possessed them once—are of little use to a woman when she has given her heart away; they can't serve her, they can't hold her back! I gave him mine. Through him I have suffered every deadly misery; I have given you and one whom I love still better than you pain that no remorse can ever atone for; I have shamed myself, I have shut the door of the home where I was happy. It makes no difference. I love him."

"You love him now?" he asked incredulously.

"Better than my life!" she answered.

I am the Seventh Redeemer

At the inquest at Darlington on Lottie Scott, a little girl whose head was smashed in with the butt end of a gun, the jury returned a verdict of wilful murder against Walter Scott her father. The mother said that just before committing the deed her husband said: "I am the seventh redeemer of the world, and have to be hanged." The mother left the room to fetch a doctor, but recollecting the child, she turned back and saw her husband striking her.

Trams on Bournemouth Front

Bournemouth town council had before them on Tuesday a report from the tramways general manager with respect to running a service of trackless trolley trams from the square to Bournemouth pier, and along the Undercliffe Drive to Boscombe. It was estimated that the scheme would cost £13,600 and the anticipated revenue showed a net profit of £1,500 a year. Opposition was offered on the ground that it would destroy the amenities of the sea front, and ultimately the scheme was referred to a committee to consider and report.

WOMEN, AVOID OPERATIONS

Many Unsuccessful - And Worse Suffering Often Follows. Mrs. Rock's Case A Warning.

The following letter from Mrs. Orville Rock will show how unwise it is for women to submit to the dangers of a surgical operation when often it may be avoided by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She was four weeks in the hospital and came home suffering worse than before.

Here is her own statement: "I suffered very severely with a displacement. I could not be on my feet for a long time. My physician treated me for several months without much relief, and at last sent me to Ann Arbor for an operation. I was there four weeks and came home suffering worse than before. My mother advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I did. Today I am well and strong and do all my own housework. I owe my health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and advise my friends who are afflicted with any female complaint to try it." - Mrs. ORVILLE ROCK, R. R. No. 5, Paw Paw, Michigan.

If you are ill do not drag along until an operation is necessary, but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for women's ills, and has restored the health of thousands of suffering women. Why don't you try it?

CHILDREN IN THE HOME.

When there are children in the home, requires constant attention to keep them free from the many childhood ailments which come so quickly—some of the proving fatal while others leave the little one cross, restless and weak. To keep little ones well Baby's Own Tablets must be kept in the house. These Tablets regulate the stomach and bowels, break up colds and fevers; expel worms and make teething easy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Humors come to the surface in the spring as in no other season. They break up themselves all off that way however, but mostly remain in the system. Hood's Sarsaparilla removes them, wards off danger, makes good health sure.
