LITTLE MRS. HOPE

By M. Quad.

COPYRIGHT, 1900, BY C. D. LEWIS.

There were 20 of us making up the party at an English country house for the shooting season, and it so happened that while all were of course well known to host and hostess seven or eight were strangers to each other until introduced at the house. I do not think there were over three or four who even knew little Mrs. Hope by name or could tell anything of her past. Nor did a great deal leak out about her father after she had been generally introduced and had come to be a favorite with both men and women. She was petite and blond. She had a baby face and big blue eyes, and your first impression of her was that she was a child, and a very innocent child at that. In the billiard room it was whispered that she was a distant relative of Colonel Saunders, our host, and that she had married a scamp and been so ill used that a divorce had been sought for. It was generally agreed that it must have all been the husband's fault and that the man who would ill treat such a light hearted, baby faced wife deserved something beyond contempt. She was by long odds the best looking woman among the eight or ten, but as she was not given to flirtation and as she looked pretty without artificial means she was forgiven for her handsome face and became a general favorite. The man who leaves business for a week or two for an outing seldom takes along jewelry or money of any account, but nine women out of ten must carry their diamonds wherever they go. There was, a brave display of gems at Rose Hill with all except little Mrs. Hope. She had two or three finger rings and a bracelet or two and made a poor showing compared to the rest. This was corroborative evidence that she was none too well fixed financially, but she did not display the slightest feeling of envy, and no hints were thrown out to burt her feelings. A country house full of wealthy guests is a bonanza for a nervy thief, and the colonel warned the ladies from the outset to be careful of their jewelry. All of them agreed to act upon the advice and then, womanlike, carelessly left every ornament lying about. On the fourth day of the party a lady named White missed three valuable rings which had been left lying on a table in her room. They had been taken in broad daylight while the ladies were on the lawn and while the maid was temporarily absent from the room. It was impossible that any outsider could have got into the house, and it seemed impossible to trace the theft to any particular servant. Counting maids, valets and the house retinue, there were about 20 people in the house aside from the guests. Mrs. White's loss was kept a secret for several days from all

The second loss was more serious. A Mrs. Willmere left her jewelry lying about after dinner and at bedtime discovered that she had been robbed of every single article. The value was at least £3,000, and as she and her busband were both excitable people the loss could not be kept quiet. Between the finish of dinner and bedtime we were scattered about the house and lawn, with the servants moving to and fro, and no stranger could have entered the house without being seen. The bedroom window was up, but no ladder had been used. It seemed to be plain enough that some servant had secured the jewelry, and one by one the entire lot were summoned before the colonel's court of inquiry and interrogated. There wasn't one without a good character, nor could suspicion justly attach to any one. It was long after midnight before we got through, and next morning the sergeant from the police station was called over. He couldn't suspect one of the guests, and he could find no grounds for suspecting one of the servants, and he got out of it by lookin; wise and saying that Mrs. Willmere had probably mislaid her ornaments. Unfortunately for her she was rather absentminded, and we presently came to accept the theory, though she searched her rooms over and over

"In pur suit of this amusement he ran up the steps of the bishop's residence, and the the detective advised them to call it a "mislay" and thereby put the thief off his guard. Colonel Saunders insisted that every fewel of value be locked up in the family safe, and when this had been done every guest became a Sher-lock Holmes. There were 20 guests tied by the sudden appearance of the good man, who had a kindly smile for and 20 theories. Everything from an owl to the stable boy was under suspicion. The detective's theory, as he gave it to the colonel privately, was that a smart thief disguised as a lady's maid or an upper servant had entered the house and committed both robber-

In late years men have made for-tunes out of the tailings of gold mines. The mills in which the ore formerly. was crushed and the crude processe then in use allowed a large percentage of the precious metal to escape, and that loss amounted in some cases to a fortune. #### BOOTS CHANGED HIS CAREER

"Talk about your two good suits of slothes," said the son of a well-known Confederate army officer. "In my young days shoes, one pair, was the badge of the plutocrat. I came of a large family, eight sons, and when things were going particularly well one of us had a pair of shoes. I was the youngest so that it never was I. the youngest, so that it never was I. Now, you would be surprised to know the effect, mental, moral and physical, that shoes have on a man. I consider that my career, aye, and my character, hinge upon the possession of a pair. When I went to school in Virginia thirty years ago, of course I was barefooted. I was a quiet youth, strong for my age, but phlegmatic and would put up with a lot rather than get into a fight

"My particular enemy in the school was an impudent and conceited boy, somewhat older than myself. He was the son of our family doctor, an culy son, and the proud possessor of a pair of shoes, shoes of the old country type, with thick soles adorned with plenty of steel. You see we were not utterly poverty stricken. We had a family doctor. You couldn't expect a Southern gentleman to be able to stand for a family doctor and shoes stand for a family doctor and shoes for his family at one and the same time. My enemy was forever tor-menting me, but I endured it silently for a long time. At last one day my patience would endure it no longer. I fell upon him and a sanguinary conflict ensued. We fought for an hour or more. We fought like windmills in a hurricane. It is true we did not often hit one another. We were usually too close or too far off. but we smote everything in sight, trees, walls and particularly the air. Tweedledum and Tweedledee were no a marker to us. We managed to blacken each other's eyes and bleed each other's noses, chiefly through the

"Finally, however, my enemy bethought him of his superior arma-ment. He drew back and delivered upon my unfortunate bare shanks a kick of cruel force and precision. I can feel to-day the impact of that mass of leather and steel. It was agony. surrendered unconditionally. Now began a period of the most heartrending humiliation and misery. Wherever I went that wretched shod youth followed. I was his slave. I ran his errands. He thwarted me in all my undertakings. He stood on his steel and leather between me and the smallest taste of enjoyment.

"There was a girl, a sweet little blue-eyed thing of twelve summers, my first love who was to me as all the world, including the village candy store. With her I would commune under the trees near the village school With her I would wax gallant and eloquent. Yankees I would slay by the score, rather than that a hair of her head about he disturbed. her head should be disturbed. I wished her to believe me a Paul Jones and Delia. "For a moment, as the spirit Jackson and Jones burnt bright in my breast, I was for giving battle. But he merely raised his foot and I saw the flash of steel beneath the leather. The fire of my valor was quenched. I turned one last despairing glance on Delia, who was laughing and slunk away. The horror of those shoes was upon me and my knees knocked together.

"But I swore vengeance, and all things come to the man who knows how to wait. That winter my father carried through successfully a piece of business. Result, the whole family was shod. My own footgear was especially magnificent. No shoes, mind you, but boots, with stout leather reaching even unto the knee. Homer was all right when he made the wellgrieved Achaeans the victors. Mine enemy and I met. He was vanquished from the start. I think he turned pale when his eye fell upon my leather-clad shanks. He would have de clined combat. But burning with the wrongs I had suffered I fell upon him without giving him time to retreat. The battle was short and flerce. 1 scorned to use my feet, but I was now proof against his mulish onslaught. I took his kicks without feeling them and smote him with my fists. Finally got him down and choked him until I was weary. But as he arose, hum-ble, bruised and trembling, I deliberately landed my armed feet on each of his shins, and with a howl of agony he turned to fice. I delivered one more kick, the most satisfactory of all, on Nature's appointed kicking

"My fame reached Delia's ears, and she was all smiles when she received me She had understood, she said. All along and her heart find there for me. I had my doubts, but the hear! of youth is as wax in a maiden's hands. Shortly after my enemy approached called to him sweetly and he came tremblingly.

"'Why don't you tell me to get cut? I asked pleasantly, swinging my foot the while, and the titter of Delia sent the hot blood of pride and joy coursing through my veins. What became of Pelfa !I don't remember. But upon those boots turned my career. My shyness and phlegm left me. y the Earl of Roslyn-There May be a Parliamentary tr quiry.

London, Oct. 30,-The serio-comi luel between the Earl of Rosslyn and Winston Churchill may lead to im-portant disclosures. It is notorious that certain regiments and individuals behaved in a most unsoldierly manner in some of the British disas ters in South Africa, but witnesses dare not mention it except to the most trusty friends, because of imper-illing the collective honor of the army.

The Earl of Rosslyn mentions in his book the mad flight of the Tenth Hussars and the Household Cavalry at Sannas post, and for that London society is cutting him. The present writer rode from Bloemfontein within a few hours after the taking of the gun few hours after the taking of the guns and met a returning force of gun-ners, who were bitterly angry, espe-cially with the Tenth Hussars. They forbade them to give the correspon-dent the details because it would breed ill-will, but it is notorious that the commanders of the Hussars did nothing to retrieve the desperate sit-uation. They were sent to make a detour and tlank the Boers in order to draw the latter from the guns and enable their recapture, but they made such a careful and enormous detour that they never went near the Boers, who removed the guns practically unmolested.

The Barl of Rosslyn's report is very largely true, but it must not be mentioned here in London. However, a parliamentary inquiry into the cir-cumstances in the chief British dissters and surrenders is promised a the next session, when it will depend upon the secretary of war whether the stories of cowardice will still be hushed up.
