POETRY

Upon the water cast thy bread,
And after many days.
It will return again to thee,
In God's mysterious ways,
Hand in hand, and side by side,
The wheat grows with the tare
And so amidst life's soiling dust,
Some angel unawares.

Upon the water cast thy bread,
Be it word or deed,
It will return a thing to bless,
In some sad hour of need.
Be the giving e'er so small,
E'en to the widow's mite,
Send it forth with hope and trust,
'This precious in his sight.

Upon the waters cast thy bread,
To those who stand or fall
Beneath some dark and fatal stain,
His love is over all.
And thou shalt harvest golden sheaves
From every seed that's sown
And scattered on the yielding earth,
Or mid' the rocks and stone.

Upon the waters cast thy bread,
And God shall measure mete,
Full, unto the overflowing,
Perfect and complete,
If only given, in touch or look,
Hath He not said to thee:
"It shall return—"is not forgot,
Since it were done for me."
